PATRICTIC EFFUSIONS.

Essivetions, which were as follows:
Resolved, 1st. That the present distress of the Agricultural, the Commercial, and War to Peace, but to an excessive taxation, occasioned by an enormous debt, useless offices, exorbitant salaries for nominal services, and a standing army; all of which are clearly deducible from that unequal and insulting representation of the People in Parliament, which not only deprives them of those inestimable benefits that are the natural fruits of a fair representation, had condemns them to suffer all the evils note. but condemns them to suffer all the evils inseparably attending the mischievous legislation of a House of Commons not representing the Nationl and these evils having gradually accumulated for many years. are now become too barassing and degrading to be longer endured, without being incessantly protested against, and as unceasingly resisted, by all means warrant with an object to overthrow the established go de by the Constitution.

Resolved, 2d. That if any proof were wanting of the impolitic, partial and unjust system of legislation, produced by the present mockery of representation, the additional Corn Bill* lately passed, affords ample evidence. It was passed in spite people, estensibly to support the farmer;-out whether we consider its object to have been to support the landed interest, in order to have their consent in the Property nominal currency, or to produce a steady price in the article of Corn; it appears to the industrious Manufacturer and Mechanic, in first raising the price of the staple article of consumption at home, and next, in preventing our own, or foreign merchants, from bringing us the surplus produce of other countries in return for those articles, by the manufacture of which our artizans used to earn a comfortable live-

TO THE READERS OF THE WHIG. "Le sage entend a demi mot."

Sometime ago, a comparatively trifling disquisition,—as all merely verbal disqui sitions are,—occupied the columns of the Whig, and called forth learning and talents, which I am encouraged to hope, are adequate to more valuable undertakings. But I wish not to be misunderstood. Because I consider that they might have been better employed, than in bandying about an unlucky word, I do not therefore insinuate that they were badly employed. I only wish to remind these writers, that there are many other subjects of higher impor-tance, which still demand their attention, and claim the support of their pens. Every one, who, from education or natural capacity, is able to reason and write with tolerable correctness, ought sometimes to snatch an hour from his business, or his bed, and consecrate it to the interests of virtue. It is a duty Ire owes to God and to man. He has a talent entrusted to his care by the Disposer of every good gift; and to leave it neglected, or unimproved is to be guilty of ingratitude, and a breach of trust. But here I will probably be met with the objection, "hat every subject upnn which they can write, has already been ex hausted, or at least, so much said upon it that they must either he silent, or merely repeat whathas been advanced by others. And is this a sufficient reason for us to lay aside our pens? I hall not say, that by turning their thoughts to a subject, and giving it a suitable intestigation, they may probably elicit something new,-I shall not point to the advance in knowledge, and the accession of mental strength, which would certainly result from every successive effort:-I shall only observe that the same objection universally receiv ed, and acted upon as valid, would arrest the progress of truth,—hasten the return of the dark and barbarous ages, -and extinguish all that is great, or amiable, in the human heart. The writers are comparatively few, who sit down to write with the assurance, that they will say something to good purpose, which has not been said before. But as every man has his own parti-cular mien and features, which distinguish him from other men; so every one has his own peculiar taste, and mode of thinking, which indentify his mind, and impress a specific character on his words and actions. Hence arises an endless diversity of manner, and variety of arrangement, among writers; which gives an air of no-velty to their compositions, and leads us to conclude, from the emotion this diver-sity creates, that the thoughts are the in-vertion of the authors. If, however, we allow ourselves to reflect, we will find that they chiefly consist of thoughts not nem even to ourselves, but deriving their apparent novelty from a combination and ar angement, to which we are not familiar. I speak of the bulk of writers; for it must be acknowledged, that there are a heaven-favored few, whose aspiring minds butst tlik imits of former investigation, and reach to their enraptured readers, fruits, plucker from the free or wisdom and Intelligence hich their own powers were alone exalt el enough to grasp. But because we can not hope to rival tliese in the importance four labours, are we to do nothing? - As vell may on old man, who has out-lived his teeth, refuse to take nourishment, be ause he cannot demolish his crust with the facility and despatch of a raw, hun gry stripling of sixteen. It frequently happens, that the author moderate abilities, whose language is plain, whose thoughts are simple, and whose subject and sentiments are far from peing new, is more generally read, and is, perhaps, more estensively useful: than lie diose thoughts burn with the radiance of genius, anti, whose language moves in all the energy and grace, the beauty arid majesty of taste and eloquence. The reason of this is obvious from the circumstance, that the greater part of readers are people of plain manners and education, and can better understand and relish the plain thoughts of a writer of moderate capacity and derive more profit from his pages than from those of the man, whose obser vations, in their nature, are more remote from ordinary apprehension, couched in the abstruse terms of Science, or clothed By Miss Anna Maria Porten, Author of "The iant decorations

In conversation, we experience a de-gree of pleasure and improvement from the discourse of some which we took in vain to find in the remarks of others; while our neighbour, from a difference of taste arid manner of thinking; will proba-bly derive entertainment and instruction from the very man whose company we shun, and whose conversation we undervalue. Just so it is with writers. I am as much surprised, perhaps, that you cannot see the perspicuity, solid sense, and benevolent heart of a certain writer, as you are, that I canot perceive the death of thought, vividness of imagination, the de-licacy of taste, which distinguish another. Every writer, therefore, how humble soever his pen, may assure himself, that if his efforts be directed to the support of vir tue, and the amelioration of the heart, in this diversity of taste, he will always find readers, who will peruse his effusions, with delight, gratitude, and improvement.
(The want of a subject is sometimes produced as an excuse for not writing, by those who have not courage to say, they are un willing to write, but I am apt to consider their apology to be more specious than solid. Can one who is really willing to add his mite to the fund of public improvement, look around him on the wide theatre of nature; on the ways of providence. and the revolution of time;—on the vicis-situdes of society, and the phenomena of mind; on virtue and religion, life,death,—and immortality,—can he look on all these, and still say there is a paucithe topics of conversation: the follies, the errors, the virtues of his neighbours; the books' that he reads; or the scenes which Nature has placed around him; from all or from any of these, he may educe obser vations, calculated to improve his own mind or to communicate pleasure and in-struction to the ninds of others. Hence I am led to conclude, that whosoever, with the ability, possesses leisure for addressing the public in any manner that may contribute to the increase of knowledge or the confirmation of virtue, and neglect to cultivate the opportunity of doing good which he thus enjoys,—is, in this particular, guilty of a breach of trust, and a crimi nal squanderer of the time and talents which belong to the public.

However, as I am persuaded that this negligence has arisen from an error of judgment rather than of will; I hope, when their own reflections shall have improved these hints, to enjoy, hereafter, in common with others, a richer share in the application and disclosure of the results of their knowledge, observation and experience. The Bible.

The sea-bound earth; the star-bespangled skies Unchang'd by seasons, or the lapse of time; Thu Sun's effulgence; Cruthia's fainter beam; The curling vapour, and the cooling air; The bursting thunder; and the meteor's gleam Whoice are they all; so dreadful; or so fair? The Brace tells,—a book, whose every line. Beams Truth limmaculate, and Love Divine,— That potent Love, descending from above, Created all;—and Gon himself is Love."

Chang'd is the scene, and perish'd is the glow; Which warm'd my soul, and swell'd my heart with joy: Guilt's horrid glooms, around me, thick'ning

And haggard passions scare my tortur'd eye.
See trembling Fear, fierce Hate, and Anger loud
And self-stung Envy, cherishing her pain!
Pale, sobbing Grief, Revenge, besmear'd with blood;—

Ah! whence arose this heart-appalling train The Brille tells thee all, whose event line Beams Truth Immaculate, and Love Divine, "That Sin, the monster, acts their parent's part,—"Their food, and dwelling too;—the human heart."

What havor reigns!—The pestilence out-brav?c
By mad Ambition's more pestif rous breath!
And fields, where erst the yellow harvest wav'd
Are haunts of horror,—dreary courts of Death The pris'ner's sigh, the sick hed's feeble moan, The murd rer's dagger, and the midnight fray The smoking scaffold, and the tyrant's throne!— What arm will block stern Ruin's ruthless

The BIBLE tells thee all, whose everyline Heams Truth Immaculate, and Love Divine, That Seer's foretold, and Angel's publish'd peace, And Jrsos died, that Ruin's reign might cease.

New scenes appear, —and earthly woes are field!— But who can search futurity's dark womb? What eye can penetrate Death's dubious shade What hand unlock the secrets or the tomb? What ear can listen Guilt's eternal wail,

Where Rage; blasphemous, rolls his pain-parent tongue,
what mind conceive the joys that still prevail,
where saints enraptur'd join the seraph's song
"Taught by the Biner, and inspir'd By Faith, "Frail man can look beyond the tide of death; "To see, to know, the pow'r is to him giv'n, "All that is dread in hell, or bless'd in heaven."

From the Patriots.—An extract of a etter dated St. Thomas, April 20, states, that a schooner had just arrived from Porto Cavello, and brings the news that the Patriots under General Paiz were victorious in a late affair; that they have already reached San Carlos, about 60 miles from the city of Valencia.

Mail Robbers .- On Monday, the 4th inst. the trial of Joseph Hare, John Alex. ander, and Lewis Hare, for robbing the U. S. mail near Havre-de-grace, came on in the circuit Court of the United States, for district of Maryland, and were severally convicted. But the last mentioned, in consequence of his youth, (being only twenty) years of age) the attorney general coincid ed with the jury to recommend him to these type mercy of the President.

Navigation Act .- On the subject of the new navigation act, the Halifax papers remark, " that it amounts to a non-intercourse act, as far as respects that colony."

University of Pennsylvania .- The Trustees of the University of Pennsylvania have elected Dr. John S. Dorsey, Professor of Anatomy, vice Dr. Casper Wistar, Execution .- The Governor of Pennsylvania has issued his warrant for the execution of Craig, (lately convicted of murder in the first degree, in Delaware county) on Saturday, the 6th of June next.

Steam Navigation .- The emperor of Austria has granted to John Allen, esq. of Philadelphia, the exclusive privilege of navigating steam boats, between the city of Venice and Trieste, for twenty years.

Presidential Visit .- The Richmond Enquirer states, that the President of the United States will in a few days visit Norfolk, and the Chesapeake, with a view of obtaining information about the best situation for a scite for a Naval depot, for fortifying the bay, &c.

Longevity.-Thomas Hothcock died in North Carolina, on the 18th Inst. at the advanced age of 125 years! He left a fort numerous family of children; one of them aged 95; another 87, antl one in Richmond county, bat little more than sixteen years

A Fish Story .- A female servant in the town of Halifax, Nova Scotia, upon taking out the entrails of a cod fish, discovered a doubloon.

Bank Robbers .- Playmart and Emmons, two of the persons suspected of having been concerned in the robbing of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Pittsburgh, have been arrested, and are now in confinement at Cincinnati.

Hydrophobia.- A melancholy instance of this dreadful disease occurred in Richmond a few weeks ago. A boy of fourteen, who was bit in the hand, was attacked with all the symptons of the disease about six weeks after the wound was entirely healed. He died in the greatest agony upon the fourth day.

From the Philadelphia Gazette. Dictionary of Popular Quotations.

We take a pleasure in recommending to the notice of the public, any work which has the power of instructing and pleasing. We have before us a book, published by Mr. Anthomy Finley of this city, which we think recommends itself to readers of every class. It is a Dictionary of Popular Quotations from the Greek, Latin, Italian, and French languages, translated into English and alphabetically arranged. We could hardly have imagined a book of more extensive usefulness; and, indeed we wonder that such a work has not long since been inhe hands of every person who has lessure to read novels, or occasion to moil in law.

The student at law will find every Latin-and French phrase, with which his study is crowded, not only correctly franslated

but also its peculiar application to his business amply explained. There are many phrases in the Greek and Latin languages, which owe their importance and frequent use not so much to the intrinsic value of the words, as to some peculiar use to which the sentence has been applied by some of the learned of "olden time:" such sentences than, without a glossary, are as unintelligible to the classical scholar as to the mere English reader.—With a particular view to this difficulty, the author of the Dictionary of Quotations has not only translated the sentence, but given instances of its application and a history of its origin. To the ladies, this book must be an invaluable acquisition: every axiom of the ancients, and all the proverbial phrases with which every species of reading, novels in particular abound, are amply detailed and correctly translated and explained.

A very careful examination of the work and particularly a frequent experience of the want of such a book, have induced us to make the preceding remarks, which we are sensible can do but little justice to the merits of the publication. After these ob- sumed provisionally the executive govern-
