in this shattered condition, determined to return to Liverpool to repair. But new misfortunes awaited the ill-fated vessel. Between four and five o'clock, the captain worn out by his previous exertion, and anxiety for the fatal accident which had occurred, retired to his cabin, after having left the brig in charge of the mate, and given him strict injunctions to keep a sharp. look out, and to call him before she got up with the Skerries. The yeasel continued on her course till about half past 7 o'clock, when she struck on the Pintters, off the Welsh chast, near to the Skernes lighthouse. The water rushed in with great, rapidity, and the vessel was sinking fast. At this dreadful conjuncture, capt. Doak, who had hurried on deck as soon as she struck, ordered the ship's heats to be in-stantly cleared away. She had only two the one a long boat and the other a very small one. The long boat was speedily filled, but only a few persons got into the small one; for, before the whole of the people on the wreck could embark, both boats were cut adrift; the persons on board of them fearing, we suppose, that if they allowed all to embark, they would be so much crowded as to endanger the lives of the whole.

Capt. Doak, who had been actively and anxiously engaged in transhipping the passengers, the mate, a seamen, and many passengers were thus abandoned to all the horrors of their impending fate. The scene which ensued was a wfully affecting. The brig was now nearly under water. Death stared the unfortunates on the wreck in the face. Mothers were seen cling-ing to their untiappy children in all the agony of maternal despair, piercing the air with their shricks whilst the helpless children clung to their distracted parents, looking to them for aid which they could not yield. At this awful moment, the small boat put about and returned towards the vessel. This afforded the people on the wreck a gleam of hope. But it was transient; no entreaties could prevail upon the persons in her to come alongside to rescue their companions. At langth the vessel went down, in less than half an hour after she struck. Capt Doak was saved by the boat, which also picked up the mate, who was almost lifeless, two children, two women, and one man. The remainder, consisting of Mrs. Moor and her four children.
Mrs Croft and child, Mrs Latham and her two children, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Taylor, were swallowed by the remorseless waves. The long boat was still in sight, making towards the Welsh coast—but capt. Doak pulled off the land, in hopes of meeting with some vessel which might rescue him and his unhappy companions from their still perilous situation.

A ship was in sight when the Sine struck. and clewed up her topsails, as if intend-ing to render her assistance, but made all sail away when she went down. The forlorn voyagers, after rowing some distance, were taken up by a pilot boat, which per-ceiving the imminence of their danger, had come with praise worthy alacrify to their succour. They then made sail after the long-boat, with which they soon came up, and took the people on board. They shortly afterwards fell in with two brigs. bound for this port, between which the survivors were divided, and safely landed here on Friday. Many of them were inta having been roused from their beds by the striking of the vessel, the suddenness of which, and the confusion incident to it, allowing them neither time now thought to dress themselves. Their immediate wants, we have been informed, were relieved by the humanity of our excellent chief ma-gistrate. A subscription has been since ppened for the relief of such of them as have been reduced to a state of destitution by this sail calamity; and we shall be happy to receive the contributions of the be-nevolent for this humane object.
