From the Flag of our Union. THE BOW SET IN THE CLOUDS.

Emblem of hope, set high in heaven, That all the world may see; When was thine advent on the earth, And what thy destiny! When earth was drowned, and in the flood All life was in despair, Did God creet thy radiant form, In matchless beauty there?

Or, till the flood of sin was past, Wert thou in cloud and storm-Neiled deep that none on earth might see The beauty of thy form! And, when the sin was washed away, As by redemption's blood, Didst thou, rejoicing, seat the self In triumph o'er the flood?

God's hand has set thee in the clouds-Perchance when earth was made-Perchance when all the mighty flood. God's great command obeyed. But there thou art forevermore, Clothed in the robes of day-So hope, that God bestowed on man,

BY JOSEPH H. BUTLER.

Bring flowers to deck that fair young brow, Bring jewels rich and rare. And I will weave a radiant wreath To bind her silken hair; Bring robes or flowing whiteness, And a veil o'er all to fling, For she must at the altar stand, Her heart the offering!

Haste-hasten hither, maiden, Why starts that crystal tear? Young hope and faith are ever strong. The aged only fear, Alas! her thoughts still linger With the dear, the cherished hours, When parent, kindred, round her strew'd Her sun lit path with flowers:

And now she kneels-she breathes the vow, Another form is there. To clasp her to his heart of hearts. And share with her each care! Protect her-sooth her-watch around In peril and in pain, And prove that Hymen only weaves Of brightest flowers his chain.

The bells are ringing merrily, Yet stay not those bright tears. They are the guerdon memory claims For long departed years; They speak of former happiness, Of love they fain would tell. And when the parting hour arrives, They fondly say-"Farewell."

CARRIER'S ADDRESS. To the Patrons of the West Jersey Pioneer, January 1, 1852.

Pause at the entrance !- what shall be The future of the dawning year? Honor and immortality, Disgrace, decrepitude and fear; Swift seasons of delight and peace-The voice of gratitude and praise, Or prayers to Jesus for release From tribulation's weary ways.

Who can anticipate his course? What eye the future dare explore? What arm can boast the matchless force To break Jehovah's barrier o'er. A moment is our breadth of time, And then eternity begins, The saint to joyful realms to climb, The sinner to embrace his sins.

Where are the seasons of the past? Where the bright future shall descend! And prospects beautiful and vast, There in a kindred burial blend. How we desired the joy to live, And wished the sorrow might decay; But hope, though present joys it gives, Passes, like present joys, away. Spring hath a thousand charms to yield, And joyful to its dawn we go; Tread with new life the freshning field. And hear the limpid waters flow. But Spring is evanescent too, Hushed must its early breezes be; Thus every pleasure we pursue, Is fashioned to mortality.

And Summer-oh how bright and fair Its early glories and its hues; How balmy is its morning air, How pleasant are its evening views. An angel with her wings of gold, And bearing luscious fruits and sweet;-Thus may her offices be told. Thus may we her kind forms repeat Summer awhile her course maintains. And scatters beauties oe'r the ground; Present through all the waving grains. And all the ripening orchard's bound. Her song of music oft is heard, Where husbandry its labor gives,

It warbles with the fluttering birds, And in the low of oxen lives. Fair Summer must decline and die; Her fruits drop sudden from the tree-Clouds hang across her azure sky, And Shade the mountain, lake and lee: And the sweet perfume from her bowers, Disperses on the varying gale,

The crimson blushings of her flowers.

Become imperfect, lifeless, pale. Then Autumn from her lowly bed. Begins her journey o'er the earth; Faint light is o'er her progress shed-More faint as distant from her birth; Valleys a mournful wail send up, The trees sway fitful to and fro; The clouds from out their treasure-cup, Bid rain in full abundance flow.

Theus Winter to the world appears, 'Mid howling tempests, drenching rain; The snow a drifting barrier rears, To the cold pilgrim from the plain; The streams secluded please no more, The trees no verdant foliage wear,

Though fair, still fleeting are our days, And all our pleasures loved below: All changeful are our mortal ways, And hopes which from our longings grow. But there is hope, eternal, sure, In Jesus oh! how firm it stands. Nothing is steadfast and secure,

Save guarded by his righteous hands. The Press! her office oh how great; Kings well might envy her decree, Though sundered from imposing state, Her voice is immortality: She vindicates, and nations rise, She scourges and oppressors fall;

And desolation covers all. Patrons, these feeble lines accept, And kindly to our hopes reply; God hath your feet from dangers kept, So shall our labors be relieved, So shall God's will with joy be done, His promise, with new faith received.

His service, with new zeal begun.

Selected for the Pioneer. How it Strikes a Stranger.

In a remote period of antiquity, when the super natural and the marvellous obtained a readier credence than now, it was fabled that My whole is one of the greatest inventions a stranger, of extraordinary appearance, was which appertain to our condition; for which observed pacing the streets of one of the magficent cities of the East, remarking, with an him, questioned him concerning his country and his business; but they presently perceived that he was unacquainted with their language, and he soon discovered himself to be equally ignorant of the most common usages of society. At the same time, the dignity and inteiligence of his air and demeanor, forbade the idea of his being either a barbarian or a lunatie. When at length he understood, by their signs, that they wished to be informed whence he came he pointed with great significance to the sky; upon which the crowd concluding him to be one of their deities, were proceeding to pay him divine honors: but he no sooner comprehended their design than he rejected it with horror; and bending his knees and raising his hands towards heaven in the attitude of prayer, gave them to understand that he also was a worshipper of the powers above. After a time, it is said, that the mysterious stranger accepted the hospitalities of one of the nebles of the city, under whose roof he applied himself with great diligence to the acquirement of the language, in which he made such surprising proficiency, that in a few days he was able to hold intelligent intercourse with those around him. The noble host now resolved to take an early opportunity of satisfying his euriosity respecting the country and quality of his guest, and upon his expressing this desire, the stranger assured him that he would answer his inquiries that evening after sunset. Accordingly, as night approached he led him forth upon the balconies of the palace, which overlooked the wealthy and populous city. Innumerable lights from its busy streets and splendid palwith rich merchandize from all parts of the known world, lay anchored in the port. This there; and the light of the candle was seen in had received, and to defer the remainder of every dwelling; and the voice of the bride- the discussion till to-morrow. groom and the voice of the bride-were heard "How!" exclaimed the novice, "say you raising his eyes to the starry firmament, he fixed them with an expressive gaze on the knowlede from me a single moment!" beautiful evening star, which was just sinking behind a dark grove that surrounded one of the principal temples of the city. "Marvel not," said he to his host, "that I am wont to gaze with fond affection on yonder silvery star. That was my home; yes, I was lately an inhabitant of that tranquil planet, from admiration this brilliant world of yours, ever one of the brightest gems of our firmament: and the ardent desire I had long felt to know something of its condition, was at length unexpectedly gratified. I received permission and power from above to traverse the mighty void and to direct my course to this distant sphere. To that permission, however, one condition was annexed, to which my eagerness for the enterprise induced me hastily to consent; namely, that I must thenceforth remain an inhabitant of this strange earth, and undergo all the vicissitudes to which its natives are subject. Tell me, therefore, I pray you, what is the lot of man; and explain to me, more fully then I yet understand, all that I hear and see around me." "Truly, sir," replied the astonished noble. 'although I am altogether unacquainted with the manners and customs, products and privileges of your country, yet methinks I cannot but congratulate you on your arrival in our world; especially since it has been your good fortune to alight on a part of it affording such various sources of enjoyment as this our opulent and luxurious city. And be assured it will be my pride and pleasure to introduce you to all that is most worthy the attention of such a distinguished foreigner.'

Our adventurer, accordingly was presently initiated in those arts of luxury and pleasure which were there well understood. He was introduced by his obliging host to the public games and festivals; to their theatrical diversions and convivial assemblies, and in a short time he began to feel some relish for amusements, the meaning of which at first, he could scarcely comprehend. The next lesson which it became desirable to impart to him was the necessity of acquiring wealth as the only means of obtaining pleasure. A fact which was no sooner understood by the stranger, than he gratefully accepted the offer of his friendly host to place him in a situation in which he might amass riches. To this object he began to apply himself with diligence, and was becoming in some measure, reconciled to the manners and customs of our planet, strangely as they differed from those of his own, when an incident occurred which gave an entirely new direction to his energies. It was but a few weeks after his arrival on our earth, when walking in the cool of the day with his friend, in the outskirts of the city, his attention was arrested by the appearance of a spacious enclosure near which they passed; he enquired the use to which it was appropriated. "It is." replied the nobleman, "a place of public interment." I do not understand you, said the stranger.

"Excuse me, sir," replied his companion, with some embarrassment, "I must trouble you to explain yourself yet further." The nobleman repeated the information in still plainer terms. "I am still at a loss to comprehend you per

But object. Several individuals gathering around truly sir if the inhabitants of the place whence you came, are not liable to any similar misfortune, I advise you to betake yourself back

"Alas!" replied the adventurer, "I must submit to the conditions of my enterprise, of which till now I little understood the import. But explain to me, I beseech you, something more of the nature and consequences of this wondrous metamorhosis, and tell me at what period it most commonly happens to man." While he thus spoke, his voice faltered, and his whole frame shook violently; his counte-nance was as pale as death, and a cold dew again with all speed; for be assured there is stood in large drops upon his forehead.

By this time his companion, finding the discourse becoming more serious than was agreeable, declared that he must refer him to the priests for futher information, this subject being very much out of his province.

"How!" exclaimed the stranger, "then I annot have understood you; -do the priests only die? - are you not to die a'so?"

His friend evading these questions, hastily conducted his importunate companion to one of their magnificent temples, where he gladly consigned him to the instructions of the priest-

The emotion which the stranger had betrayed when he received the first idea of death was yet slight in comparison with that which he experienced as soon as he gathered from the discourses of the priests some notion of immortality, and of the alternative of happiness or misery in a future state. But this agony of mind was exchanged for transport aces, were now reflected in the dark bosom of the noble river; where stately vessels laden centain conditions before death, the state of happiness might be secured; his eagerness to learn the nature of these terms excited the was a city in which the harp and the viol, and surprise and even the contempt of his sacred the sound of the millstones were continually teachers. They advised him to remain satisheard: and craftsmen of all kind of craft were fied for the present with the instructions he

Often had I beheld with wondering term of his earthly existence. "If, then, I understand you rightly," said he to his instructors, "this event which you call death, and which seems in itself strangely terrible, is most desirable and blissful. What a favor is this which is granted to me, in being sent to inhabit a planet in which I can die!" The priests again exchanged smiles with each other, but their ridicule was wholly lost upon the chraptured stranger. When the first transports of his emotion had subsided, he began to reflect with sore uneasiness upon the time he had already lost since his arrival.

"Alas! what have I been doing?" exclaimed he. "This gold which I have been collecting, tell me, reverend priests, will it avail me any thing when the thirty or forty years are xpired, which you say I may possibly sojourn n your planet?

"Nay, "replied the priests, "but verily you will find it of excellent use so long as you remain in it.'

"A very little of it shall snffice me," replied he; "for consider how soon this period I have been so lonely, and suffered so much," will be past: what avails it what my condition may be for so shere a season; I will betake myself from this hour to the grand concerns of which you have charitably informed me." Accordingly from that period coutinues the legend, the stranger devoted himself to the performance of those conditions, on which he was told, his future welfare depended; but in so doing he had an opposition to encounter wholly unexpected, and for which he was even at a loss to account. By thus devoting his chief attention to his chief interests he excited the surprise, the contempt, and even the enmity of most of the inhabitants of the city: and they rarely mentioned him but with a term of reproach, which has been variously rendered in all the modern languages.

Nothing could equal the stranger's surprise at this circumstance; as well as that of his fellow citizens appearing, generally, so extremely indifferent as they did to their own interests. That they should have so little prudence and forethought as to provide only for their necessities and pleasures for that short part of their existence in which they were to remain in this planet, he could consider only as the effect of disordered intellect; so that he even returned their incivilties to himself, with affectionate expostulation accompanied by lively emotions of compassion and amazement.

· If ever he was tempted for a moment to violate any of the conditions of his future happiness, he bewarled his own madness with agonizing emotions: and to all the invitations he received from others to do any thing inconsistent with his real interest, he had but one answer-" Oh!" he would say, "I am to die! I am to die!"

BY CATHARINE M. SEDGWICK.

I dreamed I was sitting on an eminence where the whole scene of life was before me: seas, plains, cities, and country, the world and its actors. An old man, with the noble head and serene countenance that befit wisdom, stood beside me, and I turned a perplexed gaze on the multudinous human family, and asked him "Who is it that so many others are so blindly pursning?"

"She is immortal," he replied, "whose home is not of this world. In truth, she rarey visits it. Her companionship is reserved

I took the glass, and it fulfilled its promise.

I now behold the whole world in pursuit of "Come with me," said my friend; turning this enchanting being. Some were crossing off into a charming lane, he lead me to a beau the wide sea, some treading the wilderness; masses were crowding into cities, and others flying to the country in quest of her. what chiefly struck me about her was unlikeness to the rest of the world. She was not pursuing Happiness. She was too modest to claim her presence, too humble to expect. She was so occupied with her tasks and desires, that she had no time to think of herself, but she was eager enough to obtain the acquaintance of Happiness for others. My eyes followed the whole course of this traveler between life and death," and I saw that she met Happiness on many an elevation in her life, at many a bright spot or sudden turn; and finally, when the gates of death opened to her, I saw her celestial friend, with open arms, awaiting her, to abide with them for ever and ever.

THE FUTURE OF AFRICA.

The condition of Africa, past the present, wonderfully illustrates the principles thus summarily indicated. Why a country so lovely in natural scenery, and so rich in na-tive resources, has so long been hidden from the view of the civilized world; and why one entire family of our race has been excluded from the energizing and ennobling influences of Christianity, and a Christian civilization, sis than that God has reserved both country roads, makes it the duty of the Surveyors to, and people for some unparalleled exhibition fix the damage irrespective of any advantage

But such can never be the case with Africa. THE PAPER HAVING THE LARGEST CIRCULATION IF In West Jersey! Only $1 00 per Year? FRANKLIN FERGUSON, EDITOR.

We see nearly all our exchanges are urging the necessity of their patrons paying up, so as to relieve their pressing wants. Now friends if our cotemporaries, who receive $1 50 and $2 00 per year for their papers most of them smaller than the Pioneer, are crying for quarters, what think you, we should say? Why I will tell you, give us your dollar in advance, punctually, and we will guarantee to keep the Pioneer, equal if not superior to any county paper in the State. Only save us the expense of DUNNING, and the losses incident to the credit system, and you have done enough to feed half the hands in our office. To our Job work friends we can say, bring along your work, we are in our office, with coat off and sleeves up, ready to attend to your wants, and save the tariff paid to employed hands.

To our advertising friends we are prepared to prove, that the Pioneen far exceeds, in circulation any paper distributed in the county, and that too among the right kind of men, yet we want no advertising that will shock the modesty of our particular friends, the

THE LEGISLATURE of our State will as semble at Trenton on Tuesday next the 11th

The election of officers for both houses will be the first order of business.

The Election of United States Senator will occupy the attention of the Legislature for a season, and it is to be hoped that a selection honorable to the State, will be made. Men of high character and worth have been named in different parts of the State.

There will be a considerable business of importance to transact at this session, of which the friends of the PIONEER, will be advised at an early date.

HIGH TIDES.—Thursday morning last the tide in the Cohansey was exceedingly high. The wharves generally were overflowed.

THE WEATHER .-- For the past week our town and country around has born the appearance of a small winter. Snow and cold winds have come upon us, which gives many an opportunity of complaint, and verifies the adage, "man is seldem content with his lot."

MARKETS. - Beef, Pork, Poultry, Butter, &c., command high prices in our market and very scarce at that.

WANTED .- A variety of local incidents, to embellish the columns of the Pioneer.

THE WORKING FARMER.—This valuable Agricultural paper is published in New York, on the first day of each month, at one dollar a year in advance, and is now on our table for January. We have several times referred to the high character of this work, and for the edification of our patrons will give a short deented Editor: He has a strong Vital Mobrain, especially in the forehead, measuring nearly twenty-four inches, giving great powers of research, analysis, generalization, inin, the natural sciences and mechanism. He Mirthfulness, hope, enthusiasm, and a restless spirit of enterprise.

He was born in New York, in 1806. When only eight years old be succeeded in the bold experiment of the manufacture of gaslight, which was adopted by George Youle, Esq., to light his extensive factory, which was the first building lighted by gas in the city of N. York. At seventeen he gave a full course of lectures on military tactics. Although he followed the business of a merchant until 1832, yet he succeeded in painting, engraving, and drawing, but was most devoted to chemistry, in which ho obtained an enviable reputation. He has acquired eminence as an inventor, a scholar in natural history and philosophy—is an honorary member of many European and American scientific institutions, and several of our universities have awarded to him the honorary degree of LL.D. In 1844 he was elected President of the Mechanics' Institute of New York: in 1842 he became the editor of the "American Repository of Arts, Sciences, and Manufactures." and is now editor of "The Working Farmer." He has established himself at Newark, New Jersey, on a farm which he conducts on scientific principles, and has the model farm of the state.

VALUABLE WORKS .- We have received from Messrs. FOWLERS & WELLS, the back numbers of the Phrenological Journal, the Water Cure Journal and the Student. These Monthly Publications are worthy the attention of those wishing interesting and instructive reading. Now is the time to subscribe. The Journals commenced a new volume on the first of January. Specimens may be seen at our office.

The Company now engaged in improving the road between Camden and Pine Grove, have resolved to have two tracks one of gravel and another of plank.

EDITORIAL REMINISCENCES.—The New Bedford Mercury while speaking a modest word for itself, says:-"the experience of one who has long conducted a newspaper in the midst of a limited population, is varied mony, the children he has dedicated to the Most High, and the dead he has followed to so the editor long accustomed to address himwhich he has a hazy remembrance. For the West Jersey Pioneer.

Mr. EDITOR:—I observed, recently, a notice in your excellent paper, that application will be made, this winter, to the Legislature of New Jersey, for the right to construct a Rail-Road through our State from Keyport to the Delaware Bay, not far from the mouth of the Cohansey. That your numerous readers, may understand the importance of this enterprise, to the southern part of West Jersey, I wish to give a few items of information. Keyport is a small village lying on the Rariton Bay, in Monmouth County, a few miles from the southern point of Staten-Island, and about twenty miles from the city of N. York. The distance from Bridgetouto-Keyport on a straight line, is between seventy and seventyfive miles. This Rail-road proposes to run through or near Freehold in Monmouth, New Egypt in Ocean, Pemberton in Burlington, Blue Ball in Camden, Fork Bridge in Salem and Bridgeton in Cumberland County. By this road, the distance from its terminus on the Delaware to New York, will be, say one hundred and five miles. That is eighty-five miles by Rail-road to Keyport, and twenty | vessel. miles by Steam Boat from Keyport to New York. This would bring Bridgeton within one half the distance from New York, that we ther by the way of Salem or Camden. If the contemplated Rail-road should be made, New ton in four hours, and Philadelphia in from two hours to two and a half, by the way of the Absecom road, which will probably be completed by the first of next July. It is well-known to all persons acquainted,

THE OLD BREWERY.

This famous old building, the head quar ters of poverty, crime, and m sery, situated in the Five Points, New York, is at last, we perceive, to be demolished by the authorities, and its site is to be occupied by a suitably constructed building, to be called a "Home where the wretched may find refuge, and the miserable outcast learn to reform and pursue the paths of virtue. This plague spot of the city of New York is thus to be deprived of plots have been concocted there, we can only faintly imagine.

We rejoice that this step towards reform has been taken, but to whom are we indebted for the Christian-like effort? To the ladies. Christian, kind-hearted, lovely woman has done this. Fully impressed with the importance of the movement, they resolved to purge the city of so foul a blot upon its escutcheon. The Home will be made a comfortable, commodious and healthy habitation—one of the finest buildings in the city-embracing a parsonage, a chapel, a school, a general work room; and rooms for about forty families, who will be found employment, and be required to pay the least possible rent for apartments. The Cargo of the "Manchester."

Hitherto, from want of enterprise, and under the influence of old habits, Philadelphia has gone to New York for most of her foreign assortment. She has thus enriched that city with the commissions on her purchases, with the principal part of her freight, and with other incidental expenses derived from this foreign trade. She has supported transportation lines for years by this traffic between the two cities. And in order to compete with New York jobbers for the western trade she has had to offer goods at a profit as much less in the aggregate as the amount of these various charges. But now that Philadelphia has secured a direct importing trade; now that it is rendered certain that this importing trade will rapidly increase, she is able to offer inducements to western merchants vastly superior to those of New York, for the low profit, to which our merchants have become accustomed, will not be increased, but actually diminished, in consequence of the immense increase of sales. The comed by the Governments of Prussia, Belgium paratively lighter store expenses, the more careful method of doing business, and the less extravagint ideas as to what constitue: a fortune, will still enable our jobbers to work for a slighter return, not only safely for themselves, but beneficially for the South and

The City of Manchester has identified herself with the prosperity and pride of Philadelphia in a way that can never be forgotten. Important Information for Rhenmatics. Haddonfield, March 28th, 1852. Dr. Steelling-Dear Sir-Some time since I was ttacked with a severe Inflammatory Rheumstism, was entirely bedridden, and could get no relief, until I made trial of your Rheumatic Liniment, which entirely cured me, after I used two bottles of it. I would observe that before using your Liniment, I had a physician, but derived no benefit from his medicines. I have also been cured of a severe attack of Lumbago by the same Liniment. My wife had a severe attack of Rheumatism, which entirely deprived her of the use of one of her hip joints; she used two bottles of your Lini-ment and was entirely cured.
