THE PLANTING.

A PARABLE.

"I said to my little son, who was watching with tears, a tree that he had planted: Let it alone; it will grow while you are sleeping!"

"Plant it safe, thou little child: Then cease watching and cease weeping; Thou hast done thy utmost part; Leave it with a quiet heart:

It will grow while thou art sleeping." "But oh, father!" says the child, With a troubled face close creeping-"How can I but think and grieve, When the fierce winds come at eve.

And snows beat-and I lie sleeping! "I have love ! my linden so! In each leaf seen future floweret; Watched it day by day with prayers, Guarded it with pains and cares, Lest the cauker should devour it.

"Oh, good father!" says the child, "If I come in summer's shining, And my linden tree be dead-How the sun will scorch my head, Where I sit forlorn and pining!

"Rather let me evermore Through this winter-time watch keeping, Bear the cold, and storms, and frost, That my treasure be not lost--

Aye, bear naught !- but idle sleeping." Sternly said the father then: "Who art thou, child, vainly grieving? Canst thou send the balmy dews,

Or the rich sap interfuse, That one leaf shall burst to living? "Canst thou bid the heavens restrain Natural tempests for thy praying! Canst thou bend one tender shoot? Stay the growth of one frail root? Keep one blossom from decaying?

"If it live and bloom all fair, Will it praise thee for its blooming? If it die, will any plaints Reach thee, as with kings and saints Drops it to an equal tombing?

"Plant it-consecvate with prayers, 'It is safe 'neath His sky's folding Who the whole earth compasses, Whether we watch more or less-His large eye all things beholding.'

"If He need a goodly tree For the shelter of the nations, He will make it grow; if not, Never yet His love forgot Human tears, and faith, and patience.

"Leave thy treasure in His hand-Cease thy watching and all weeping, Years hence, men its shade may crave, When the mighty branches wave Beautiful-above thy sleeping!" If his hope, tear-shown, that child Garnered safe with joyful reaping,

Know I not; yet unawares. Oft this truth gleams through my prayers: " It will grow while thou art sleeping!"

LOVE OF THE BEAUTIFUL. We take the following beautiful extract from a recent lecture of the Rev. Henry Giles delivered at Brooklyn one evening last week. One strong desire that includes every other, lies at the bottom of all deep, sincere study into nature. It is to find realized into facts what corresponds with that conceived of in the mind. To find that complement which shall perfect the completeness of his knowledge by the wholeness of his idea, is the effort of every profound thinker. The history of all great discoveries, is but the record of what this has accomplished. It is by a love of nature that this feeling is inspired; and thus philosophy and art belong to the same principle of our nature. Philosophy is its theorum; art its problem. Philosophy seeks to arrive at the perfect, and art endeavors to embody it. It is, as thus inspired and thus sustained that the physical sciences properly tained that they unite themselves with the ical science studied only in reference to prof-But even away from individual selfishness, er laws of the spirit and confined to the domain of mere materialism, cannot attain to brought him. The beautiful in art is the and for humanity, and there is no beauty in manity itself. Humanity is the subject on which art works with its grandest labor. As man is the centre of the natural creation, he is also the centre of the ideal creation. This principle was most fully borne out in Greece. The religion of the Greeks was deification of humanity-and art was their religion rendered perceptible. We build temples in which to worship-the Greeks built temples as an act of worship. Their conciousness of the divine was in their sense of the beautiful .-When they would pay their utmost homage to divinity, it was by giving expression to their most perfect ideas of beauty. Humanity deified is the centre of the beautiful in Pagan art—humanity canonized is the centre of the beautiful in Pagan art—humanity canonized is the centre of the veranda of the hotel, and I am quite the beautiful in Christian art. A temple is a monumental consecration of a high sentiment. It is no wonder that the Israelites should have turned with such impassioned ardor-that their hearts should burn and their eyes weep, when they thought of the house which their fathers built unto their God. The heathens say that Titus wept over its destructon. Titus was a cultivated man in his way, and he was sentimental. But not in such tears as Titus shed, do we understand the pathos of such a fall, or the depths of the catastrophe. Years before,

Eastern Correspondent of the Boston Post. THE JUGGLERS OF INDIA.

In Madras are found in perfection the celebrated eastern jugglers. Groups of them are daily at the hotels upon the arrival of a steam er, to exhibit their wonderful feats and receive rupees. They danced cobra capellos, opening their flat heads to show them sound in fangs and venom bags, and made them perform a variety of poses. The snakes danced in a circle, kept admirable time with the music, and exhibited the most amiable willingness imaginable to accommodate Europeans. A handfull of sand taken from the road was made to mark every color and finally to produce a shovel full of every variety by a simple manual operation. Plants grew perceptibly, balls danced in the air, swords, hooks, jagged pieces of iron and steel were used like sounding leads to penetrate abdomens; eggs made birds and birds made rabbits and rabbits in their turn underwent various transformations; common cotton balls moved at command, go ing away an immense distance but returning on the ground very obediently until we were completely tied up and turned inside out ourselves with amazement and credulity. Then came the great feat of the greatest juggler in India: the most notorious and wonderful of all deceptions and "for this night only." The performer, the leader of the party, had ested quietly with his wife and child outside of the circle, watching the entire proceedings of his men and noting the general effect upor the assemblage. At the conclusion of an announcement proportionate with his dignity and elevation, he stepped into the enclosed space to give a grand finale to the whole performance. Taking a child, a little boy five or six years of age from its mother, despite her tears and entreaties he signed the attendants to procure the required implements for his feat, directing their arrangement and position according to his mind. A large basket, six or seven feet deep made of straw, was shown to the spectators that they might assure themselves of its being a basket without any addition or improvement-simply a baskthe aspirations that it would crush; of the sick- et of straw, very common in all parts of the world. Inverting it, after the dilligent investigations of the entire party, he stood his little boy in the centre of the circle and covered him with the basket like an extinguisher on a candle. The room allowed the little fellow an upright and apparently a comfortable position. We were permitted to see him unler the basket and to satisfy ourselves of his being there without any doubt. A naked sword having received an equally close examination, was placed in the man's hand, and the feat commenced. Assured of the child's concealment under the basket, of the keenness and validity of the sword, we waited in silent horror for his next proceeding. There was no table with its apartment, no trap in the basket, nothing but the hard stony floor, and no confederate near him. Taking the weanon in his hand, he waved it in the air, muttered a jargon & commenced a series of rapid thrusts through the basket, making the point penetrate every time the opposite side, down into the basket, and all over it until it could hardly support its weight from mutilation. Blitz and those men?

We notice in the city papers an advertisement of the peremptory sale of two valuable lots of ground, with "foundations and stables thereon," situated on the corner of Madison square and Twenty-fourth street, and owned by Henry Dwight, Esq., whose recent failure A brief description of this splendid mansion, aninteresting to our readers.

In its architecture it will There is no more interesting study than resemble the style known as the Palladian or modern Italian. The apartments are intended to be spacious and magnificent in the extreme; and the drawing-room, if the plans of the architect are fully carried out, will be surpassed in size by none in the citythe dimensions, twenty-six feet wide by fortyfive feet deep. The firs story will consist of a spacious dining-room, library, conservatory, and billiard-room. The upper rooms, or sleeping apartments, are intended to be unsurpassed, so far as their architectural proportions are concerned, for comfort and convenience. The foundations are bound together at a great expense, with inverted arches, which secure, together with the hollow walls, the greatest possible amount of strength and

The stable, which we are informed is not qualled by anything of the kind in the city, occupies the adjoining lot, which measures twenty-five feet front, fifty feet rear, and ninety eight and a half in depth. Each stall has accommodations for hay, grain and water, and the occupant of each is elevated upon a faise floor, so that all water is immediately carried off. It forms a residence of which any quadruped, even of the most sanguine expectatiens, might well be proud. The cost of the entire establishment carnot, we are told, fall short of $130,000. The case of Mr. Dwight is precisely similar to one that we witnessed in 1837. A celebrated speculator of that day was in the habit of riding down town from his palace to the corner of Wall street. He always got out opposite Trinity Church, and walked down he street where he carried on his operations. On one of these occasions he was met descending from his beautiful vehicle, by an old five dollars a week. The friend exclaimed: 'What splendid horses and carriage!" "Yes, pretty fair," was the reply. "Why, you must be very rich," rejoined the other. "Oh, no," said the financier, "not rich. I suppose am worth about a million and a half. No, no, not rich." In two or three weeks after the revulsion came. This speculator was found uot to be worth a penny. His house, horses and carringe, and all that he had, were sold at auction. Here, now, we see the same brilliant, reckless career pursued; and can there be a doubt that it will terminate, ere long, at the same goal of ruin, and that the sound of another destructive crash will soon be heard, which will shake Wall street to its foundation, with uppertendom and the commercial interests of the whole city? When the trees in spring put forth their buds, of every tint and hue, we know that the bright bloom of summer is nigh, when the joyous birds shall nestle in the branches and warble their songs of love. And when the feathered songsters become mute, and the gay foliage of summer is charged into the sere and vellow leaves of antumu. and these leaves begin to drop, one after another, to the earth; we feel that the gloom of dreary winter is approaching, when the nipping frosts and whistling winds shall strip the oak, the sycamore, the maple, the beach, and the laburnam, of the last vestige of their beautiful garments, and the howling tempest shall sweep over land and sea, strewing its track with desolation. Thus with many of our paper money mushroom aristocracy, and their proud wives and danghtersit was first the spring of hope and promise, then glorions summer, with its blushing honors; it is now the fall, with sadness tinged; and soon shall come "the winter of their dis content," with clouds and darkness brooding over the scene.

"Throw them away," said the stern faced physician; "throw them away—this is no place for such things!"

Throw them away! throw away the only thing in that darkened room, which calls up a beauty she will never see again, when the eye of the pale invalid rests upon them! throw away the only things in that room which give it such a look of gleaming sunshine, the only things which bring a bright, glad smile over the wan check of the sick girl; for as she gazes on the beautiful emblems, she thinks of the fairer brighter flowers, blooming in the better land to which she is so quietly and surely has.

Methinks had the thoughtless physician seen the sunny spot in the dark eye of his patient, and the bright flush which came over were first brought into her silent room, he would not have said so coldly, "throw them away." For the unnatural brilliancy in those lark eyes, the heautiful flush of such delicate brightness on either cheek, tells that when the summer flowers shall bloom in sweetness and beauty, she will not behold them! tells that when another season puts forth its bright buds and blossoms, the sun-hued flowers will bloom upon her lonely grave

Then throw them not away! they will do more good than all the medicine the physian he had run down a dozen apple women in his will ever give her. Rather throw away his useless medicines; for they will not save her life, neither will they bring one thrill of joy to her heart. But those bright flowers with friend, who knew him when he was worth just their sweet fragrance and sun-like beauty, they will bring a warmth like the golden gladness into that sinking heart; they will give a gleam of sunshine to the dark streak whose cold waters she must pass alone.

Many months have I been an invalid .-Many hours, lonely and weary, have passed in my sick room, and many times have the flowers which kind friends have often sent me brought a thrill to my heart and a tear to my eye. For they wake dreams of other days, ere my step had grown slow, or my check had lost the red hue of health. Then place flowers in the sick room! place them where the eye of the weary invalid may rest upon their beauty; for they soothe the couch of sickness like angel smiles, and bring dreams of a sun-nier land over the faint and dying one.

CURIOSITIES OF SLEEP.

In Turky, if a person happens to fall asleep in the neighborhood of a poppy field, and the wind blows over towards him he becomes gradually narcovised, and would die, if the country people, who are well acquainted with the cirumstance, did not bring him to the next well or stream, and empty pitcher after pitcher on his face and body. Dr. Oppenheim, during his residence in Turkey, owed his life to this simple and efficacious treatment. Dr. Graves. from whom this anecdoie is quoted, also reports the case of a gentleman, thirty years of age, who from long continued sleepiness. was reduced to a complete living skeleton, unabla to stand on his legs. It was partly owing to disease, but chiefly to the abuse of mercury and opium, until at last unable to pursue his pusiness, he sank into abject poverty and woe. Dr. Reid mentions a friend of his who, whenever anything occurred to distress him, soon become drowsy and fell asleep. A fellow student also, at Edinburg, upon hearing sudlenly the unexpected death of a near relative threw himself on his bed, and almost instantancously, amid the glare of noon-day, sunk into a profound slumber. Another person, reading aloud to one of his dearest friends stretched on his death-bed, fell fast asleen. and with the book still in his hand, went on reading utterly unconcious of what he was uttering. A woman at Hainauli slept seventeen or eighteen hours a day for fifteen years. Another is recorded to have slept once for forty days. Dr. Macnish mentions a woman who spent three-fourths of her life in sleep, lady who slept for six weeks and recovered The venerable St. Augustine, of Hippo, prudently divided his hours into three parts, Ezekiel Philpot was born in America, some in June, Zeke placed his long body into a shirt, run his long legs through a new pair of striped trousers, wrapped a span new waist-coat about his breast, hauled up his stiff starched cotton dickey, and tied a check gingham about his neck, and then donned the swallow tailed coat, the brass buttons of which ooked like a row of newly risen stars. Zeke was literally a pioneer in the "Bloomer Cos-tume," at least so one would have thought to have seen him as he stood now. He disdained to have his trouser's legs daugling in the mud, or to have the cuffs of his coat dangling in the wash bowl; so his blue stockings peeped forth wash bowl; so his blue stockings peeped forth from beneath the tops of his cowhides and looked up full six inches to the trousers' bot- of the Hughes River. A broad laugh from the crowd soon brought Zeke to his senses, and convinced him that he had been sold. But ere he could find his tongue again, an old salt, about "three sheets in the wind," paid for his chance, and ossayed to climb the pole. The sailor hugged and with a geological idea, what kind of stones tugged, got half way up, and then slid. THE PRESS.

Between a free and independent press and liberal and enlightened institutions, there is so close a connexion that each necessarily sustains the other. Hence, while it is the duty of correct legislation to leave the press unshackled, it is no less the duty of the latter to lay faithfully before the people all matters which, in their bearing, have a general cr particular interest, or a tendency to violate some principle of political economy.

In the formation of different political parties, having for their object the establishmen of leading measures of public policy and interest, and the consequent enlistment of a partizan press to support or oppose them, something of a safeguard against the extremity of party action, is felt. To the zeal with which these papers carry out the objects of their establishment, their readers will have no hesitation in bearing testimony. Whilst to them we willingly concede the task of vindicating their respective parties, we do not by any means admit, that the action of legislative bodies, is not strictly and justly, so far as it affects the public interest, a proper subject for the comment and opinion of an inde pendent press. Whenever it becomes of such a nature as to dread scrutiny, its character has become suspicious. It is a sound political axiom that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." To justify all the acts and actions of one political party, and condemn all acts of another, is one thing. To examine all important public measures in which the people patronizing the journal feel their party origin, is quite another. In the should semetimes agree and sometimes differ. Independence does not imply silence and we because some political party or journal chooses to differ with us upon some point of policy. any party, and consequently could not be thieves and it would therefore be advisable to called partizan. We hold it to be a duty owed by an independent press to its patrons, to express just and liberal opinions upon important seem to be needed, and to keep them advised of all matters pertaining to the interests of sey it is both proper and right for us to speak. to express an opinion and exert an influence, vance per year. in the manner we have indicated. An open and manly expression of opinion will call for h a respect from an opponent, which a servile acquiescence in the opinion of a friend will fail to do. The more independent and fearless the press becomes, the more congenial its influence to the design and objects of republican institutions. Let it become the refear of running across somebody's creed or sentiment, and what can be more inconccivably servile and mischievous in the influence it bestows. If the press of Europe were free and entirely unshackled, all the minions that despotism could draw to its support, though armed with all the implements that tyranny could invent, would fail to keep in miserable subjection the millions of degraded and downtrodden sons of ambition and oppression. A free press and servile population cannot exist together. The existence of one is incompatible with the existence of the other. The establishment of a partizan press alone is not of itself necessarily sufficient to always establish and support the principles vital to the existence of liberty. The press of England is divided into parties but is totally ineffectual in ostablishing the principles of republican liberty. The press of France furnishes another example where partizan journals have proved ineffectual in establishing the principles of political freedom. The violence of party zeal unchecked leads too frequently only from one species of oppression to another, as was most painfully illustrated in the scenes of the French, South American and Mexican Revolutions. It is then only in the unrestrained and legitimate enfluence of the independent press that we can look for a uniform vindication of the principles of genuine freedom. The very independence with which they express their opinions, and their firm resistance to party domination, are so many safeguards to the continuance of political and religious liberty. To dependent journals we attribute much of that tone which they invariably breathe. moderation and general acquiescence in the ever varying and changing results of our aneach successive election is held in a kindlier and practical lesson in social life. feeling than the last, a result by no means to be attributed to the efforts of the party press. However desirable then party publications may be, to keep up and sustain party organization, independent journals have a duty to perform far higher in its office, more beneficial in effects, and consequently more worthy the support and countenance of a free people.

The party when together numbers about sixty and have a number of horses and maintain themselves by various kinds of tinkering and fortune telling. They are extremely filthy in their manner of living. The original gypsies appear to be a Hindoo race from the banks of the Ganges. They are supposed to have been dispersed and scattered into Europe by the celebrated conqueror Tamerlane. In many of the countries of the European continent, particularly in Austria and Hungary they are still very numerous. In all ages they have retained the same wandering unsettled character and have not unfrequently been charged with crimes from which they have been expelled the country. Various unsuccessful efforts have been made by different sovereigns from time to time to improve their habits and cultivate their understandings. In some instances they have adopted Christianity, but in such a formal manner as to make but little impression upon their hearts. They not unfrequently have their children baptized several times for the sake of the presents customary in some places to be bestowed by the god-father.

They are passionately fond of their own children whom they allow to grow up in idleness rather than correct them. The reputation of stealing children has been given them and in former years with some appearance of

In personal appearance the gypsies resemble the Asiatic race, being remarkable for the vellow brown or olive of their skin the jetty blackness of their hair and eyes and the extreme whiteness of their teeth by which in Spain the Gypsy girls have been considered of stealing children and incorporating them into their bands we do not see how these physical traits would be likely to be very long preserved. FOR THE LADIES:

Kall and Winter Fashion. NFLUENCED by the prevailing law of Fashion the subscriber continues as heretofore, to pre sont new fashions at the opening of the various Seasons. Taste demands that these fashions shall possess new combinations and exhibit aspirations after new forms and embodiments of the useful and beautiful. The increase of his business affords the most gratifying evidence of the kind appreciation in which his previous efforts have been held. His present offering is a DRESS GAITER for Fall or Winter, in the first style of elegance and dis-tinction—being composed of rich and durable ma-terials. While his principal fashion will undoubtedly be acceptable to the general taste, yet in or-der to gratify all, the subscriber has prepared a variety of styles, so that every one, old and young, plain or gay, can select that most becoming for themselves. The Paris style of Gaiter will commend itself for its dress appearance, it being de-cidedly the Gaiter for the promenade.

The subscriber therefore can confidently invite the attention of his friends and the public, to his establishment, giving them the assurance that he is fully enabled to offer articles of his own manufacture, at lower prices and of better quality, than are usually met with. It will ever be his aim to maintain for his goods the distinguished mark of superiority and relative Cheapness, which alone render them worthy of commendation and appro-

Beauty, Health, and Cheapness. AMUEL L. FITHIAN has on hand and for sale a large lot of Zinc Paints as follows viz. Pure Zine White No. 1, 2 & 3, Brown Zine, Black Zine,

The Zinc Paints in their improved state have tested side by side with the Best Pure White Lead and has in every instance proved to be superior to above business, begs most respectfully to assure White Lead both in Color, Durability, Beauty, and his friends and the public, that he shall continue Cheapness. From experiments it has been found to sell at prices which an inspection cannot fail to that 100 lbs best White Zinc will cover when applied in three coats on new work as much surface as 1662-3 lbs White Lead Pure, and will cover as well which makes the Zinc over 60per ct cheaper than

It is equally applicable to inside or outside work or for the bottom of vessels or in any other place where paint is necessary. The reasons above given, we think should satisfy any one of the Superiority of the Zine paints but should any yet doubt, we we think we can fully satisfy them give us a call and we think we can fully satisfy them of their superiority for Beauty, Durability, Health & Cheapness.
