THE DESTINY.

BY CLARIBEL.

I saw him leave the humble roof That sheltered him so long. And knew beneath the rustic garb, A gen'rous heart and strong. I heard the sigh, the hushed farewell-The mother's fervent prayer, That from his father's evil ways, God would in mercy spare; Would shield him from the fatal cup, That one appalling sin Which made her life all desolate, But for her joy in him.

Once more I saw him, and among The noble of the land-A group of choicest spirits Now enclosed him in their band. Success had crowned him, and I saw His dark eye beam with pride; But yet the truth of early years, He had not east aside.

Gay, courted, leved-for Woman turned Her earnest eyes to him-And still before his mother's love, All other joys grew dim! Again I saw him; pride and wealth,

And summer friends had flown; And woman heard no more entranced, A voice like music's own; The happy light his brow had worn, Was changed to blank despair, The frenzy gleaming in his eye Proclaimed "the spoiler" there! His mother, wasting slowly, With her bitter, untold grief, Had found, at least, within the grave, A wished for, kind relief. Oh, God! why was her heart-felt prayer So powerless to save? Why left that loved and gifted one To fill a-Drunkards Grave?

Much has been said and written upon diet, eating and drinking, but I do not recollect evwages for less work, and, being made a man of leisure, he is talked of next town-meeting titudes, and especially ladies in easy circumstances, contract a vicious and destructive mode of breathing. They suppress their breathing and contract the habit of short quick breathing, not carrying the breath half way down the chest, and scarcely expanding the lower portions of the chest at all. Lacing the bottom of the chest also greatly increases this evil, and confirms a had habit of breathing. Children that move about a great deal in the open air, and in no way laced, breathe deep and full in the bottom of the chest, and every part of it. So also with most out-door laborers, and persons who take a great deal of exercise in the open air, because the lungs give us the power of action, and the more exercise we take, especially out of doors, the so as not to require you to stoop; you will find the employment much easier-not one half so fatiguing, whilst the form of the chost and symmetry of the figure will remain perfect. You have noticed that a vast many tall ladies stoop, whilst a great many short ones are straight. This arises, I think, from the table at which they sit or work, or occupy themselves, or study, being of a medium height for a short one. This should be carefully corrected and regarded, so that each lady may occupy herself at the table to suit her, and thus prevent the possibility or the necessity of stooping. It will be as well not to remain too long in a sitting position, but to rise occasionally, and thus relieve the body from its bending position. The arms could be moved about from time to time.

A house painter the other day being told that he should wear a moustache, to avoid the diseases to which painters are liable, replied: "It is rum, not paint, that makes painters sick. I have had my nose over a paint pot for thirty-five years, and I have always been well." Paint is injurious in itself, however, but he was right in the main principle. FRANCE AND RUSSIA

The Emperor of France, despite his professions of peace, is anxious for war and 'full of fight.' The New York Times says the circular note of M. Drouyn de L'huys, addressed to all the French Ambassadors at the European Courts, may be regarded as a preliminary declaration of war,—as indeed a threat directed to the Russian Czar. The words of such a document are indeed essential to an accurate judgment of its object: but the purport of it, as reported by telegraph, is quite sufficient to warrant the belief that a general war is inevitable. The declaration which it embodies, that "the affair at Sinope took place against all provisions, Russia having declared that she desired only a material guarantee," and that " to defend the Ottoman flag from new attacks from the naval force of Russia, the French and English fleets had been ordered to enter the Black Sea," is especially significant. It arraigns the faithlessness of Russia on the one hand, before the bar of public opinion, and on the other gives Turkey the assurance, calculated to be especially offensive to Russia, that she need fear no recurrence of such a piratical surprise. And additional weight is given to this official note from the sneering tenor of the instructions sent to the Admirals, who are ordered to use force against any Kussian man-of-war, the commander of which shall refuse compliance with the request to return to Schastpol, where he will find further instructions from his government. Add to these considerations the language used by the Emperor to the Ottoman Ambassador at the diplomatic levee on New Year's day—" My good wishes, my sympathies and my efforts are in favor of your Sovereign and you will be good enough to communicate to him what I say;"-and we shall have an aggregate of circumstantial evidence, which proves conclusive that all hope of a peaceful settlement had been abandoned. Russia cannot avoid making some direct reply to these demonstrations. That reply will probably be given by the recall of his Ambassadors from Paris and London. The Emperor of all the Russians could not in honor avoid this step, even if he did not wish for war. While upon this subject, we may remark that the Times has received from a private source, generally well informed, concerning the movements of foreign Courts, an interesting item of intelligence illustrating the preparations on foot for the Eastern war. It is sta-Take a gallon of crude fetid fish oil, and ted that the English Cabinet recently proposit would leave the English Government at liberty to withdraw from active participation in the war at pleasure; and that whonever the same position before the world. In nine years, the brief period since its invention; there have been 17,500 miles of telegraph put up, and in working order, under the Morse patent alone. This amount is about two thirds of the total number of miles of telegraph in operation in the U.S. The aggregate number of main and branch lines in the United States is stated at about one hundred. There are completed and in operation, 27,000 miles, and 10,000 more are in progress of construction. The route selected for a telegraphic communication to the Pacific by the Committee on Post Office and Post ez, Missicoippi, extends through Texas, crosses at the head of the Gulf of California to San Diego, and then passes along the coast to Monterey and San Francisco. The entire distance is 1,400 miles.

SCHOOL PUNISHMENTS.

But few departments of life have exhibited more beneficially the results of reform than the school room. The mode of imparting instruction, has undergone a great and important change, adapting itself more to the understanding of the student, seeking to interest and attract his attention while improving his intellect. In visiting well regulated schools one is struck with the superiority of the pres ent system, over the birchen arguments of ancient days. In the school room as well as the other departments of life the reign of brute force has been succeeded by the intelligent management of cultivated minds. Even with children it is beginning to be more generally realized, that a punishment to be effectual must be accompanied with a conviction of the understanding of the culprit. A child should first be satisfied that he has broken some necessary regulation of school discipline, (usually not a very difficult task) and that the punishment to be inflicted is a just penalty for the violation of the law. Unless this is done, he will be likely to imagine that he suffered unjustly and a feeling of hatred, perhaps revenge be engendered in his bosom leading to a still further violation of school requisitions. What more common than for pupils on returning from school to fly to their parents with the tales of the days wrongs and sufferings, inflicted by their instructors. Until their judgments are matured, they cannot be expected to see and understand the consequences resulting to themselves and their schoolmates from their misconduct. Hence their frequent complaints to their parents. Those who are made to un derstand and know the justice of their punishment, it is presumed but seldom complain. Like their seniors they condemn not what they think is right, but what appears to them as wrong. In convincing the judgment of the propriety of punishment, it should be the aim of the teacher as much as possible to make it understood that the particular means of punishment are also just. A pupil may be subjected to an improper punishment, even for a punishable offence. Of this children are not unfrequently aware. Improper punishments dination to school discipline, are more likely to lead to the reverse. It unfortunately happens that from youth to age mankind exhibit a proneness to violate those .laws which tend to their moral, social and physical interests. Accustomed from an early age, both at home and at school, to use no effort of the understanding to comprehend the inevitable conse- unnecessarily to its penalties. quences of prolonged ill doing, or to examine a means of reform, they pass through life the

In fact the deigning to explain to its subjects the reasons idly enforced, it will but be aiding at best in raising up an artificial kind of society, whose machine like movements, are regulated by no fixed object save the dread of punishment. On the contrary if the proper and enlightened policy is pursued, of punishing only real offenders in a proper manner, after having satisfied the offender that a persistence in his course of conduct was injurious to his best interests, the effect would be to induce a spirit

There is as much good resulting from the vinced. judicious application of a penalty as in the penalty itself. The effect of a proper punishment may be lost by its improper application. The result of an improper punishment is almost always injurious; although it may deter from a repetition of the same or a similar offence, it almost invariably leaves upon the mind of the pupil an impression of hatred, perhaps revenge, which years might fail entirely to obliterate. It is important to the is exceedingly rich in embellishments and welfare and progress of scholars that their in- | well stored with valuable reading matter.-Whenever they fail to do this they can scarce dering and shell work, and other illustrations hope to carry out the full benefits of their oc- of female employment, present an array of empation.

ment upon himself and those around him.

The increasing attention to the subject of education and the qualifications of teachers, has led to the abolition of many improper punishments in school. So that we may reaem will be purified of all its most glaring innsistencies.

In the punishment of offenders whether juvenile or adult, the principle of reform should feeted by the judicions use of such penalties as are calculated from their nature to make a favorable impression upon the heart. The old and boxing the ears, are fast getting into disfavor with the best teachers.

All punishments which lead to obstructing the respiration, overtasking the nervous system, or accustoming the mind to a degrading exposure should be avoided.

The adage that "the eye of the master is than in the school room. Vigilance on the part of the teacher prevents the necessity of punishment, and the requisition of perfection in all the pupil undertakes, leads to the full and proper employment of his time, preventng much of the inducement to misconduct.

GOOD FARMS .- We would invite the attention of capitalists, to the unusually large number of valuable farms advertised in our columns. It but very seldom happens that so large an amount of really valuable farm property is in the market at one time. These farms are situated convenient to schools, churches of different denominations, navigation, and near the line of proposed Railroad routes. Besides this they are now highly improved and invite a certain and remunerative investment of capital. Whenever our soil becomes properly understood, farms in this Co. will undoubtedly be sought after. In fact after the completion of the West Jersey and Air Line Railroads, no county in the State will possess superior advantages for agricultural developement and prosperity. The county is healthy, the people moral and intelligent, the climate earlier than about Camden, recommending the property to the attention of truckers, and is so well watered by navigable streams extending into it, as to place almost every farm in the county within a conphia or New York. With the railroads above alluded to the farms would be placed within two hours reach of Philadelphia and four hours of New York. Besides the farms, "Fortescue Retreat" which has acquired a reputation for its excellent bathing and gunning facilities, is also offered for sale. The buildings have been fitted up for boarders, and every facility for their comfort, convenience, or pleasure can be offered. To a person rightly qualified to vens, Clawson, M. Beauty, Health, and Cheapness. NAMUEL L. FITHIAN has on hand and for sale a large lot of Zine Paints as follows viz. Pure Zine White No. 1, 2 & 3, Brown Zine, Black Zine, Zine Dryer and Demar varnish. The Zinc Paints in their improved state have now been in use for a number of years and fully tested side by side with the Best Pure White Lead and has in every instance proved to be superior to White Lead both in Color, Durability, Beauty, and Cheapness. From experiments it has been found that 100 lbs best White Zinc will cover when appli ed in three coats on new work as much surface as 166 2-3 lbs White Lead Pure, and will cover as well which makes the Zinc over 60per et cheaper than It is equally applicable to inside or outside work or for the bottom of vessels or in any other place where paint is necessary. The reasons above given we think should satisfy any one of the Superiority of the Zinc paints but should any yet doubt, we should be pleased to have them give us a call and we think we can fully satisfy them of their superiority for Beauty, Durability, Health & Cheapness.
