A MOTHER'S LOVE.

BY R. PORTER DYER.

I do marvel how a mother. In the midst of numerous cares, Can contrive so well to manage All her femily affairs.

From the early dawn of morning Till the hour of evening rest. Who can tell the thoughts and counsels That are busy in her breast?

What apparel must be furnished, ... And what stitches must be set! What an endless round of duties By her labors must be met.

Then the queer and curious questions Which her little children ask. The will answer with affection. Though 'tis not an easy task. -She will list their sad complainings

When affliction gives them pain, She will kiss the wounded finger, So to make it well again. If her little baby's crowing.

Is sweet music in her ears, And her tide of love flows deepest For the child of fewest years, For an instinct of her heart.

If against his roguish elders, She shall take the baby's part? Yet she wins her children's reverence.

While their hearts are very young. By her gentleness of manner, And the kindness of her tongue.

Yet I marvel, yes I marvel, How a mother's spirit bears All the burdens of the household, And its never-ending cares.

And I bow to that deep wisdom ... Which, when first our race began, From a crooked rib of Adam Made a "help" so "meet" for man

For the West Jersey Pioneer. RELIGION

Religion, what a glorious name, how it fills the soul with love and enthusiasm to dwell upon it. Is it not truly astonishing that in this enlightened age of the world, there is so many who, wholly, disregard, the precepts of Christian anity and Beligion, who act as though they were mere brutes, had no vitel existence and anticipate no higher, no greater joys than those of earth.

We have a good assurance that they died in the full hope of a blessed immortality, and asunder to part with those we love, to think we shall no more mingle with them in society, no more see their faces in the flesh, yet we have a glorious hope of meeting them in that better country, where parting will be no more; where we shall strike glad hands on the frontiers of glory and chant the songs of redeeming love to all eternity. Religion should be our chief concern while upon the earth, and to endeavor to attain to a greater height in this important matter, to be continually making some advancement in the divine life .-There is no standing still in Religion, we are either growing in grace or decreasing in spirit. Dividing Creek, Nov. 1854. THE LONE CARIB SQUAW.

BY MRS. M. A. DENISON.

I wish you could have seen her as I did, bending down from the tall rock. The riveraltar (for it seemed like an altar) was of itself a sight for the curious, broken by deep fissures, plustered with rich sea green, red and gray, covered at the base with tiny vari-colored shell fish, encrusted with a kind of hard; glittering weed, that in some places shone with the clearness and brightness of silver. She was a tall, yet not gaunt figure, though very thin; her movements were rapid, her eagle eye flashing and darting from cloud to shore, and from shore to the calm deep of the river. Her arms were slight, yet well rounded, her long, thick, black bair hung in beavy masses over her naked breast and shoulders. Her features were European, but her hue was that of the copper-colored tribes on the Esse-

In their soft language, the Carabeese called her "the lone Carib squaw." It was supposed that she was the offspring of a white man-but since the sorrow that had widowed her heart, she had never spoken to them. She had wandered away from the remnant of her tribe-sometimes lappearing at one place, sometimes at another—never living in cabin or ledge—fishing and hunting for herself. The arrow, the blow-pipe, the gan, were all familiar weapons to her. The Indians were afraid of her, and some thought her an evil spirit. Twenty years ago she lost her husband to whom she had just been wedded by Christian missionaries. But a few moons before, the young brive had accidentally killed the son of a chief. As it was well known blood seemed not required; and but for the jealou-y of an Indian of the family, who loved Kniweewiall, feuds might have slumbered forever. But on the day succeeding the Messrs. I have raised this season between one and two hundred chickens of the buff and white Shanghai varieties. All things considered, I think the Shanghai are one of the best (if not the best) breeds of fowls we have. There is a great deal of difference in the stock of this breed. #### IMPROVEMENTS.

The handsome block of Store houses, being built by Mr. Isaac A. Sheppard, on the west side of the creek are nearly completed. They make a fine appearance, will be very convenient, and their location will make them very pleasant, particularly in the Summer. The large room in the third story will be fitted up for a lecture room, or for public meetings, fairs, &c. It is large and will supply the demand for accommodations of that kind, the want of which has heretofore been felt so much in our town. The room is pleasant, and we learn, is to be conveniently fitted up with chandeliers, benches &c., for the accommodation of an audience; we trust that Mr. Sheppard will find this a profitable investment. Mr. Thompson's new building on the east of the bridge, is nearly completed and will soon be occupied. This also, will add much to the appearance of the business part of our town. One part of it is now occupied by Mr. BY RAILROAD COLLISIONS.—The constant Enoch Moore, both on Pearl street.

Mr. Samuel Reeves, the overseer of the roads is actively engaged in improving Pearl Street. Our streets have been very much improved within a few years, and each improvement however much it may be opposed by individuals while in progress, is duly appreciated when finished. Mr. Reeves, like those who have gone before him in the work of improving their ways, meets with fault finders, who could do things better, as they think, but he is encouraged by the mass and is determined to goahead. We would say to him persevere, make your improvements permanent so far as you go and trust to receiving the approval of your townsmen hereafter.

Mr. Ezekiel Moore the overseer on the west side of the creek, deserves, we think, much credit for the timely care which he gives to the roads on that side. A stitch in time saves nine, is peculiarly applicable to roads, constantly liable to get out of order for want of a little attention.

SACRED MUSIC. - We attended on Tuesday Evening, a Public rehearsal of Prof. Kendall's singing class, in the first Presbyterian Church, it was not as we understand, intended to assume the character of a Concert, but learned, and the proficiency that had been attained during their first quarter's tuition. There appeared to be no attempt at artistic to produce the impression of extraordinary attainments, and we were the more pleased that it was so, we had a better opportunity to estimate the real advantages the class had obtained by their instructions; the class was very large, including every age, from the little girl who could scarce sit upon the bench, to the full grown men with the white hairs beginning to come into notice. All appeared to take part in the exercises, and all seemed interested and engaged in the performances of the evening. Mr. Kendall may well feel proud of his class, and the class may feel proud of their instructor; they are now properly prepared for real improvement in music. and another term of instruction will fit them for enjoying good music themselves, and giving pleasure to those who hear them. There is in the class we believe, representatives from all the religious denominations of our town. and we trust that if they persevere in their course of instruction, the Church music of our place will be materially benefitted by their improvement.

More Large Eggs .- Mr. Henry Hilliard of Deerfield, and Mrs. Robinson of Hopewell have left with us some unusually large eggs, measuring 7 inches one way and 6 inches the other. They are of the common stock, who can beat_them?

It's rather interesting now that "election's over," to turn back to the political papers and peruse the many "amiable things" that were said of political opponents.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The engrossing topic of foreign news is the war: -- intelligence from the contending armies is esgerly looked for, as if we had an interest at atake on the issue. There is enough of progress with the armies engaged in the entest to keep up an interest in the proceedings, though no brilliant or startling operations have yet taken place.

The allied armies before Sebastopol are actively carrying on the siege and making their advances; the business of bombarding the city and its defences is constantly kept up, and one or two breaches are said to have been made. The Russians have not been idle, but have made several sorties, in some of which they have displayed much spirit, and succeeded in materially deranging the operations of the beseiging armies; a reinforcement of some thousands have succeeded in making their way into the city to strengthen the beseiged forces. It was expected, at the time of the last despatches from the seat of war. that in a short time an attempt would be made to carry the place by storm. The forces, both of the allies and of the Russians, are accumulating in the Crimea, and the prospects of active, sanguinary, and destructive warfare, is becoming more and more apparent.

The ordinary horrors of war is not the only evil attending this contest,-the cholera has made and is still making dreadful havoc amongst the armies of both the contending parties; the sacrifice of life and health is immense and there seems to be but little prospeet of an end to the contest. The allies cannot draw back-they have gone too far; the Russians will not give up the contest, for they cannot do so without disgrace; we see nothing left for them but to fight and fight on-supplying the vacancies made in their ranks by decease and by conflict, with fresh supplies of recruits from their people at home. The Turks seem in a measure to be lost sight of in the present operations. Sebastopol and its fate engrosses the attention of the world too much at present to allow them to feel an interest in the less interesting and important operations taking place elsewhere. We shall look with considerable interest for the news which it may be presumed a few days will

The destruction and loss of property ion with the dreadful sacrifice of life, is immense and would seem sufficient of itself to induce those interested to exercise greater care and guard more effectually against these disasters. We fear that the security against loss by insurance has a tendency to prevent that vigilance on the part of owners, which would be exercised if the danger of pecuniary loss was more certain to result from want of sufficient care. There are Steamers and packets which seem to be comparatively safe: there are Railroads on which we scarcely ever hear of any serious accident. Is there not in these cases more vigilance exercised by those having charge of them, or is it to be attributed to

For the West Jersey Pioneer. Penny Town Correspondence. LETTER No. 1.

Penny Town, Nov. 8th. 1854.

A hazy, dreamy atmosphere is resting over the country. An autumnal quiet pervades our village, and all the landscape and all life seem to feel the sober influence of the season. The solstitial heats of summer are only remembered, and indeed it might almost be doubted whether they were ever experienced, save that they are of record on the door side of the rural apothecary shop, in near vicinity. to an infallible Fabrenheit. And now the sun comes up in the morning through the strenks of fog that hang upon the slopes and vales of Penny Town; at mid-day his light is blurred and undazzling, and at night he sinks to rest secretly in the almost palpable ether that lies along the horizon, or goes down to his bed gorgeously in gold and crimson. The dry stulks of corn, with withered blades rustling in the wind are standing in lonely stacks, and Gloucester the ears wrenched from them by the husker lie scattered in yellow heaps over the wide extended fields. A little fruit is clinging to Middlesex the boughs, but our orchards are barren nowa-days and the once creaking eider mill stands Ocean rotting and unused. The pheasants are drumming in the low places, startled partridges whir before us, the blue-jay screeches at the oak-top and the flicker is busy among the gum berries. The rabbits that a few weeks ago ran fearlessly and trustingly across the oathway are seen no more; timid they crouch their covert beneath the laurel bush .-ees and the keen pointer unlicensed bounds over our domains. The brown chestnut burrs lie empty upon the ground, and the frost is hoar and sparkling each morning on the fields and and boys and girls of all ages are gathered to- ture. gether to enjoy the benign effects of his instruction. Hands that have grown hard in the summer's toil, that have culled potatoes from the furrows, and thrust the sharp peg into the corn-husk are now dog-earing the thin leaves of spelling-books, and bringing their inflexible joints around the slender stem of a pen handle. But hands will be softer, faces whiter, hearts tenderer, and minds stronger when Spring comes-unless the weather should be cold and dry and the roads become very good, in that case it is not improbable some of the boys may be taken off to haul marl, for we have parents yet who gather here to talk over politics, the wondrous results of elections, and to make sagacious predictions of the future. Such are the indications about Penny Town of the decline of the year. We are in the enjoyment of Indian Summer, that season when the aborigines of our country were wont to get ready for the cold moons, and to lay a season whose external manifestations are pleasant to the senses, it is one provocative phere and the richness of sunsets may bring to us, rises up the analogy between the fading year and the fading life, and creeps in the sadness which decay will ever suggest to think it a more important matter to improve the soul. Let us hear what the poets say of Autumn. Thompson writes:

A gentles mood inspires: for now the leaf

Incessant rustles from the mournful grove. Bryant calls these days "The melancholy days, the saddest of the year," and Kents addresses Autumn as the "Season of mist, and mellow fruitfulness close bosom friend of the maturing sun."

Pope in a letter to a friend in very beautiful prose, thus gives his opinion. "Do not talk of the decay of the year; the season is good when the people are so; the prospects begin to open through the thinner woods over Atlantic; the valleys, and through the high canopies of Cape May, the trees to the higher arch of heaven; the Cumberland, dews of the morning impearl every thorn and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth; the forests are fresh and wholesome. What would you have? But our own American poet, T. Buchanan Reed, in lines called the "Closing Scene," and beginning:

This gem which I have read again and again till its melodious meas-Well if the farmers get rich and we get too of its existence, and placed it side by side with Craig's Elegy. In a number of the North British Review, taken from the Penny Town circulating library, (I think the North British.) I lately found an article ranking my favorite as the first of American poets, and this very piece as the first of American poetical productions. Mr. Reed is an artist-poet, and at present lives in Florence where he is more lucrative than that of literature. Amid the immortal works of the old masters, and in the galleries haunted by the genius of Michael Angelo, of Rafaelle, and of Rubens, his pencil may catch something of their inspiration but never will the canvass glowing beneath its touch prove him to be more Heaven. endowed than do those sweet lines beginning "Within this cober realm of leafless trees." Such gossips of Penny Town as I meant to have told you must be omitted; the season and the poets have excluded it; another time I may talk of matters more interesting. Affectionately, Commerce, too, is very much the source of a nation's wealth, and wealth is power. No people can to any great extent carry out the great purposes of their being without money. A poor people can make no very great advances in edulte. tion, in the arts or sciences, in works of putlie improvement, or in social or moral reforms. Commerce is the high road to wealth. It reveals to one people the wants of another; and by making these wants known, it creates a demand, which is sure somewhere to create a supply. Industry is consequently evoked; na ural indolence is overcome, and the demand is supplied. It is in this way that the resources of a people are brought out, and their skill and enterprise cherished. A desperate and bloody affray occurred on board the steamer City of Richmond, on her last trip from Phiadelphia to Norfolk. The particulars are these: A detachment of seamen, under the charge of two United States officers, were on board, destined for the receiving ship at Norfolk. The passage being red ash, Schuylkill &c., of all sizes at the shortest a long one, these men became possessed of an inorquate desire for grog; so they broke open the hatches one night, and got among the cargo, where they found a barrel of liquor. They succountered some difficulty in getting at its shirt in the bung hole, then withdrawing it, and squeezing out the liquor it had absorbed. Thus they got uproariously drunk, and the next thing of course was a fight, which was quelled by the officers after several of the soldiers had been wounded:
