From the Jersey Blue. MY MOTHER'S GRAVE.

BY SARAH S. SOCWELL.

When the western sky is bright With the sunset's crimson light, Where the old oak branches wave, There I seek my mother's grave. Evening breezes gently pass Through the long and rustling grass, And the flowers that lightly wave O'er my mother's lowly grave.

In the brilliant azure heaven Gleams the holy star of even, While I sit 'mid twilight gloom, Weeping o'er my mother's tomb. When my feet have gone astray From the straight and narrow way, Lord, I call on Thee to save, Kneeling by my mother's grave. When life's sorrows and its fears Bow my soul in grief and tears, Then I learn life's ills to brave, Praying by my mother's grave. And when peace within my breast Folds her snowy wings to rest, Free from sorrow, fear and gloom, Then I seek my mother's tomb. Shiloh, Nov. 1854.

The Peerless Yankee Flag.

All hail! triumphant flag, The ensign of the free, Bright beacon of the brave, Ranner of Liberty! It is no "flaunting lie," 'Tis no "polluted rag," It proudly waves on high-The peerless Yankee flag. It shield's no pirate's deck,

It binds no man in chains. It yokes no captive's neck, But nobly heeds his claims; Its stripes are "burning sores" To traitors and to knaves, Who breed inhuman wars

To fraternize with slaves. Its stars are living lights, To guide us safely on, And curs'd be he who strikes The blazing standard down Accurs'd the wretch whose hand, Fill'd with a traitor's gold, Shall seek to mar and brand His country's sacred fold!

Unfurl the glorious sheen, Its disc is pure and bright; Unconquer'd and supreme, Its motto "Truth and Right." It is no flaunting lie,

'Tis no polluted rag, It proudly waves on high-The peerless Yankee Flag! It waves in triumph there-Destroy it ye who dare!

We are different from other nations. It is not essential for the government of England lished every Saturday Morning, at $1.00 that the masses of the English people should per year, in Advance, or $1.25 at the end of the year.

Napoleon to retain the crown of France, that every Frenchman should become acquainted with the theory of the government. If they did it is very probable that the vote would be the other way, and that instead of retaining the crown he might lose his head, and none will pretend to deny that if the people of Europe were as intelligent and well informed as the people of this country, they would not remain for a single year under their present masters. In fact the only safety of despotism is in the ignorance of the people, and the only safety of republicanism is in the general intelligence of the people. Whatever other foundations we may rest our institutions of government upon, the first and foremost should be in the universal education of the masses of the people. The means of attaining it must be placed within the reach of every one, so that none can evade it. Let the next generation improve upon this. Let them understand the true theory of government. Let the duties of the citizen be taught in our schools, -so that they may take a comprehensive view of things that may concern the welfare of our country.

Greece and Rome were once republics, yet after awhile they lapsed into monarchies .-France has twice tried it and failed; and hitherto no nation has succeeded in establishing a republican form of government that has stood the test of time. And from that the friends of despotism presage the end of this. But the republics of Greece and Rome were not planted upon the broad foundation of universal learning. It is true that they handed down to us a literature which has lasted longer than their nationality, and which has never been equalled. But they lacked that mighty engine of human improvement, the press, and knowledge could not be a universally diffused among the people as at the present day. It could be obtained only by a few; education was confined to a small circle, while the masses were entirely ignorant, and thus was a great chance opened for ambitious and designing men to seize upon the reigns of government. In France, too, the revolution failed from the same cause, that is the people were uneducated, and not being able to judge themselves, and guard the rights which their sword had obtained, they listened to the voice of party leaders, who wickedly deceived them and gathered the power into their own,

With us it is different. with us it is different. The good sense of our ancestors planted early the institutions of learning, and as the forest disappeared before ploughed under, will be in their appropriate the hand of civilization, the schoolhouse rose, and stood side by side with the humble log cabin. This early education, instilled into der, and all loose boards made fast; and the the minds of the people, enabled them to onpose a successful resistance to the encroachments of great Britain. And when we emerged into a republic, this early principle strengthened with our strength, and kept pace with the murch of improvement. We owe our continuance as a republic to the existence of our common schools.

Let education keep pace with the extension of our territory and the increase of our population. It will keep the church and the state separate. ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF PRINTING The city of Mentz, in Germany, is entitled to the honor of being the birth place of Printing. Strasburg and one or two other cities have laid earnest claim to this high benor, but it is generally conceded by historians, that it belongs to Mentz: Guttenberg invented, and first used separate letters or moveable types, in 1442. As early as 1823 he had printed with lines cut on wood, but this was only a small mechanical advance on what had been done for many Xylographic printing, or the taking of impressions from a wooded table, on which letters or figures were engraved, had previously been practiced in Germany. This was an eastern invention. It has completely swept the pernicious traffic from he state. An open groggery cannot be found. He adds:

"I have not seen a person here since the first of August in a state of intoxication. In our cities and manufacturing villages, streets that were formerly constantly disturbed by drunken brawls, are now as quiet as any other. The change is so palpable that many who have been strongly opposed to such a law have been forced to acknowledge the efficacy of this. REJOINDER.

We deem it advisable, that as one year ha passed, since the ownership of the BRIDGETON CHRONICLE, has passed into the hands of HARRIS B. MATTISON, and as he has retained at the head of his editorial column, a Notice containing false representations, which have and are intended to advance his pecuniary interest, to the detriment of another; and also, within that time, coupled the PIONEER with of last week, re-iterated said falsehoods, adding others to them, we shall as circumstan- munity. ces may admit, prove to him and the public, that he has stooped too low to filch from his neighbor that which he cannot replace, and charged him with doing what an honest man would not; therefore, if he possess the honor which should belong to his position as an Editor, he will retract—We will first take the point:-"Our readers and the advertising community can very readily see by examining the columns of the Pioneer and Chronicle which has the largest advertising patronage. And as a natural consequence advertisers are not so blind as to have their advertisements inserted in a paper with the smallest circulation," and analyze it, and in so doing show his false position as to legal advertising, and also, that the PIONEER has by far the more reputable class of advertising, as well as the decidedly largest amount of local advertising:-and if necessary will take (at a future day,) without going to his Private Book, the Chronicle's CIRCULATION, & compare it with that of the PIONEER, with the same minuteness, and show that the Pioneer lantic, and Cumberland counties, (each) and in all, a circulation of at least 350 the greatest, and among the business part of the comto answer, direct our inquiries, as we will his. First then, there are Nov. 18, 1854, 56 persons who advertise in both papers,-63 who advertise only in the Chronicle, and 63 who advertise only in the Pioneer; so far, so

As to the character of the 63 advertisers in the Pioncer, which are not in the Chronicle. 30 are of Merchants and Mechanics in the county, 1 List of Letters, (legal,) 9 Administrators. Executors, Guardians, Agents, and owners of Real and Personal Estate, and 23 of Merchants and Mechanics of Philada., &c.

In comparison with which the Chronicle has 63: 5 are of Merchants and Mechanics in the county: 1 Orphans' Court, (legal,) I Guardian, 7 Miscellaneous, and 49 of various descriptions, from Philadelphia, &c., some of which the Pioneer has refused to publish at

By reference to the Chronicle, it will be scen that three columns are occupied with Patent Medicine, Stage, and Steamboat advertisements which are, from their incorrectness calculated to lead estray men, women and children; fourteen, of other advertisements, leaving 11 columns for choice editorials and other miscellaneous reading,-opposite to which the Pioncer has 13 columns of reading matter, saying nothing about the subscription prices of the two papers at present.

The Pioneer has the advertising of the Sheriffs of Cumberland and Cape May, the Post Office, and most of the Administrators, Executors, Commissioners, and Guardians, and were it not for political jealousy, the Surrogate advertisements, of this county.

The Chronicle has the Surrogate's of Cumberland and Cape May, and thus the legal advertisements are divided.

Now Mr. Chronicle, who is correct? Down with your false colors, or the next shot we suppose will shatter the flag staff.

Our readers have doubtless heard of the suspension of the firm of Reeve, Buck, & Co. who have been carrying on the Iron business in this town for so many years. We have reason to believe that this is only a temporary matter, arising from the general embarrassments of the country and that very shortly all their liabilities will be promptly met from their abundant assets, not immediately available. We are glad to perceive that their works are still in operation in our town.

OAK HALL .- From the style in which the proprietor has furnished the public with an idea of his extensive Clothing Establishment 32 and 34 North street, Boston, we presume you can be suited on the best terms. It is a handsome little present for your child, and a good advertisement for Oak Hall.

Eight o'clock is the time fixed by the Cohansey for leaving Salem hereafter.

Our thanks are due Hon. Nathan T. Stratton for valuable public documents.

Our country generally, and many parts of

The Banks in some of the Western States have not proved sufficiently strong to bear up against the run made upon them and consequently there is great want of confidence.-The rapid developement and immense productions of those States must however, very soon remedy the evil and remove their em-

The difficulties experienced by the Banks many of them, what are termed Free Banks, their circulation secured by stocks &c., and the difficulty of realizing without great sacrifice the cash for those stocks will probably induce people to ask whether after all, good said false representations, and upon Saturday | Banks upon the old principle of specie basis are not more reliable and better for the com-

A little more than a week since, the world was in quite a commotion in consequence of Louis Napoleon's having refused to allow Mr. Soule, our Minister to Spain, to pass through France on his way from London to Paris.-There seemed to be a fair prospect of getting up a war of words, if nothing more between the two countries, for however insignificant Mr. Soule may be in himself considered, the by do Forty shillings reward to any person official character with which he has been improperly invested by President Pisvee, it was supposed would render an insult to him a national concern and that the government would onsider it necessary to resent the affront.

We trust that the continued succession of troubles and disturbances which have attended Mr. Soule's residence abroad, will teach our President a lesson, and induce him hereafter to look about him and endeavor to find Americans enough to represent our nation in foreign countries. America must be governed by Americans.

Wars.-After a long period of comparative exemption from wars, enjoyed by the civilized nations of the world, men had began to conclude, that nations as well as individuals had become wiser and better, and would not again by trivial causes, be drawn into these destructive and expensive contests which had in past times, swept off such multitudes of haman beings, and been productive of so much miserv in the world. We have however renewed evidence of the weakness and imperfection of man in his associated or national, as well as in his individual capacity. The war now going on in the East, commenced for, we can and more important; gives increased evidence of the probability of its being protracted and bloody, of its spreading over different countries, and drawing within its vortex, the va. band, black and white Lace. Whereas the report of Oswego's being ta ken with the loss of our troops there I am told has occasioned some people to doubt, whether I will take that part of the stockings | weighing one quarter of a pound. Wherefore I hereby give notice that this report need be no obstruction, for in the first place it may not be time, and if true the Troops may be recruited, and lastly I have publicly advertised and contracted for 1000 pair of stockings, and in consequence thereof, great part of them have been made, and materials provided for others not made, which would be a manifest injury to the people concerned in furnishing this supply should they be on hand, and as I have given publick and private assurance of taking their stockings I esteem myself bound in Honour to ratify it and there-JACOB SPICER.

The United States Senate. - Twenty-seven democrats have been elected or hold over in the next United States Senate, The legislatures of South Carolina, Florida, Alabama Louisiana, Arkansas and North Carolina, are democratic, and will send seven democrats more from those states, there being two to be chosen from North Carolina, making thirtyfour democrats certain out of sixty-two members, all of whom except four were in favor of the Nebraska bill, and it is believed, will be against any attempt to disturb it. The In addition, they have the control of the legislatures in Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsyl vania, Wisconsin, and New York, and may elect six Senators in those States, increasing their force in the Senate to twenty-four. The New Hampshire legislature, which will have to elect two Senators; is yet to be chosen .-The Senator from Missouri is doubtful, and so is the Secator from California. It will be seen, therefore, that the democrats will have a working majority in the Senate in the session of 1855-56. The House will be largely in favor of the opposition .- Ledger.

A Sign of Better Times.—A gentleman writing from California concerning the habits of the people of that thrifty State, which got its growth before most States cut their first teeth, says: "Old boots and sho s, and old clothes, are mended now, and not thrown into the streets less than half worn, as formerly. We are getting to be a tolerably prudent, decent sort of people." This; he notes as a sign of success; and it is a good subject for thankfulness on the 30th, if their Governor wakes up in time to appoint that day as a proper one for General Thanksgiving. For whoever mends his old clothes, may be pronounced an economist, and safe from sudden collapses of the purse. Happy is he, of course whose clothes have no rents to be mended, and whose shoes need no mending. But when they do, he is a spendthrift that throws them in the gutter. Our puritan ancestors mended their old coats always, while the Cavaliers that settled the South disdained patches; and the social economy of the two sections still speaks of the difference. California, by this new habit of hers, shows herself substantially a New England State, and it is not possible that she will fail of attaining all the wealth and prosperity that her youth promises. When people come to reckon what they spend as well as what they gain, there is hope of their laying something up. Till they do that, they "pour into a knot-hole" with the hope of filling it .- Bro Jonathan.
