ADDRESS BABBILB

West Jersey Pioneer, January 1, 1857.

Hail, New Year Moru! thou welcome guest-Most looked for season of the year; To old and young, to grave and gay, Thou bringest fair hopes of joy and cheer. To give thee welcome, all unite. In strains of bliss without alloy; Then, new-born year, acc prof this, The tribute of the CARRIER BOY.

Young morn! with heart of biggest hope I bail thee, and with pride I look. Forward, through a long train of days, And see thy path without a crook. I see for thre in unrufil it way, Beset on every side with flowers; With blooming vales of clustering vines; With flowing brooks and fragrant bowers.

And I behold in embryo, And hope we all may find it so. That ere thy dying knell is heard. The telegraph may bring the word From Trenton, that our Bridgeton has Incorporated been-and gas Will soon be shining in our streets, And watchmen will be on their beats, To guard the town while others sleep, But loafers, who in concert keep, And prowl around to seek their prey, 'Till day-light drives them quite away. And, too, our Council and our Mayor Shall have put in excellent repair Our side walks, that no more we need, While hurrying home at night with speed

Fetch suddenly up against a knoll-

Which sorely tries the very solel

· But, ah! I fear my hopes are vain, For judging by the years before thee, When thou art gone me thinks I'll have To tell of thee a different story; Of blighted hopes, of sick ning fears, Of joyous smiles, of burning tears, Or scenes of mirth, of saddest sights, Of usurpations of our rights; Of spars of strife, and of contentions Which happen now days in conventions, Where parties meet to "save the nation," And publish to the whole creation, That 'less their candidates succeed. We are a ruised race indeed; Of marriage feasts-of funeral trains Which bear away the last remains Of some lov'd friend of whom 'swas told, His coffers teem with shining gold; Whose lands extend for many a rood, Whose stock was of the choicest brood; Then hurry back to quarrel and fight, Who to his substance has a right-A right to scatter to the wind The labors of his bands and mind, And ruminate on barrowed wealth, Be counted "fast," and waste their health, And to their sorrow soon to find That riches leave a curse behind. Of scenes of joy-of sights most sad, Where wine has drove the 'nebriate mad, And crushed the fondest hopes to dust, Of her who put her virgin trust In him who taught her heart to move-Who won that price—s woman's love, But who, despite of all that love, Has les his home with sots to rove, Has left his home with all its joys, Its darling little girls and boys, While they with hunger cry for bread, But unappeased creep to their bed
Of straward rags, varietiesed to be
A couch of chaptest turiny.

Had I the lightning's tongue of fire, Had I well of liquid ire, In which to dip my feeble pen, I'd burn upon the heart's of men The pains, the greans, the bitter grees, The significantic from those haunts wise, Where alcohol, man's deadliest foe, Doth in its dire fruition glow. But I must turn to fifty-siz, of And to my thyme must here affix Some of the things which have transpired.
Since Mystre from us retired.

Old year, there's many a sorry tale Which I might tell of thee. Which may here printed be. Thou hast walked with tyrants' tread upon

A portion of our land, And spread dismay and wretchedness, With a relentless hand. And thou hast caused the clank of arms

To cease, across the ocean, Which kept the world so long a time In such a great commotion. And thou hast spread thy icy pall Across our favored town,

And smote, with thy impartial hand, A noble townsman down. But young and old—the small and great, Must own thy mighty sway; and none can tell who here shall see Another New Year Day. Yes, thou hast been a famous year, A year of contest and commotion; Some how—though it seems very queer— Three parties all took the same notion,

That they could 'leot their candidates, To rule o'cr these United States. The sequel of the case you know, So I will let the matter drop, And talk about the time when'ts said The Ladies have the right to pop The question to their bachelor friends, And ask them fully to atone

For long years spent in solitude, By journeying no more alone, But taking to themselves a wife, To smooth the cares and ills of life. -

Our town still keeps its onward way, And walking through its streets each day, We can but see, with native pride, Improvements made on every side. Just as you cross the bridge (east) over, Right at the end you'll there discover A noble pile of towering bricks, Which, during eighteen fifty six, Have gathered there, a mighty mass, Which mee's our gaze as on we pass. Mosthinks that when that block is done, "Twill be to me a sort of fun, To stand and see the rosy lass, Assisted by the brilliant gas,

Which shines so bright from every store, Gaze on the treasures it lights o'er. Among the improvements of the year, We have a Fire Comp'ny here, Composed of men of hearts and strength, Who in this purpose "go their length," To make their Company a crowd Of which the town may well be proud. Success attend them without pause, But for their service be no cause.

But while improvement's talked about. We Bridgeton people must look out, Or Millville yet will take the lead, For she's progressing with great speed; Her spindles' humming meets the ear, The forge and anvil's ring we hear, Which make the sound of industry Peal forth with light and merry glee.

Her vessels bear the produce Of her own laborers' hands, To gratify the wishes of Both near and foreign lands. And there's her rosy lassles, In health a beauty clad-They're just the very antidote

To cure the love-sick lad. She boasts the largest cotton mill That beautifies our State: In fact, all things are there combined,

To prove she's growing great. But having spun my yarn full long, I now must close my new year song; But 'fore I go, just hark ye here, I'd most forgot the Pioneer, The cheapest paper in the State, In which our business men relate. Where can be found good merchandise-For they sell cheap who advertise. And those who wish to advertise,

Have heard the proclamation, That the Bridgeton Pioneer has got A monstrous circulation: Therefore they know what course to take, The public eye to meet, So they off to the office go. On Pearl and Commerce street;

And those who want to read the news In print that's large and clear, Go where they can a paper get For one hundred cents a year. And now, kind friends, I wish you all,

A long and happy life-To every "buxom lass" a man; To every man a wife; And more I wish-I wish each pair A little son and daughter;

To make my story short, I wish You all to give a Quarter ! If not convenient, though I know You all are willing to, We'll compromise the matter, and Will make a shilling do.

The following daguerectype of his Satanië Majesty, was given by a negro preacher in Virginia, to his culleard brathern:

FOREFATHERS' DAY. Two hundred and thirty-six years ago, iz., December 22d, 1620, a small, weatherbeaten bark touched the rocky strand at Plymouth, Massachusetts. The wilderness, snowclad and bleak, was solitary; and no voice was heard but the breaking waves of a wintry sea, and the moaning of the winds through the branches of the pine trees which crowned the cheerless coast. The little company which debarked from the May Flower, and on their knees, amid the snow and ice of that inhospitable shore, offered up thanksgiving for the preservation of their lives-not for wealth and honor and comfortable homes, and the protecting arm of civil government-but for the privileges of life and liberty in the wilderness. They were not only expatriated, but driven across the sea to a worse than solitary wilderness, and infested by ravenous beasts and the savages of the forest. Yet

And the stars heard, and the s And the sounding aisles of the dim wood rang With the anthems of the FREE."

This verily looked like a small beginning —as "the least of all seeds," for empire and future greatness, but they came in obedience to a principle, for liberty of conscience freedom to labor, and think, and worship. According to outward seeming, their persecutors might have laughed them to scorn and have regarded them as annihilated, so far as their independence or greatness in the future were concerned. As they left home and country for freedom us, Ohl God, in the behalf of the widow and of religion and of thought, they acted in harmony with that principle. They did not seek to establish commerce and outward prosperity first; these were not their chief errand, but they erected a rude edifice which should serve the double purpose of church and school-house, and in this they took shel ter until they could build cabins for thei families. From that hour onward education and religion, or the culture of the intellectual and moral faculties, seem to have been their leading idea; and though famine and sickness thinned their ranks and threatened to exterminate them, they triumphed over multiplied obstacles and evils, mantaining through all their sufferings their original thought, viz., liberty, education, and religion.

The mother country, not satisfied with ex patriating the Pilgrims, greedily followed them across the sea as soon as they began to prosper, to hunt down their liberties and eat to picture. out their substance. But we find this little band, though not very numerous, yet strong enough to resist the oppressive invasion. In a century and a half the banner of American liberty floated over the sterile shore where the little May Flower discharged her handful of faithful souls; and to day, this little colony, and a few contemporaneous ones, have become great, and spread out into a broad empire which stretches across a continent and stands up before the world a proud and powerful nation, eliciting the respect of the world for its prowess and enterprise. Its commerce whitens every ocean; its agriculture, its man-ufactures, and its inventions rival those of the richest and oldest countries; while its schools and its liberal institutions surpass those of any people in the world.

But Plymouth Rock and the May Flower do not belong alone to Massachusetts nor to New England. Thousands on the shores of the Pacific, and tens of thousands whose enterprise has subdued the Western wilds, and extended the arts of peace and civilization with a rapidity and power before unknown in the annals of mankind, have been animated by the blood of the Pilgrim Fathers, or been guided by that which their example furnished, and hence they justly claim kindred with all that makes the name and fame of Plymouth Rock immortal. A LETTER FROM CAPE MAY. MR. EDITOR:-With your permission we will give your readers a few items of intelligence, which we hope may not be wholly without interest. Many of your youth and men of full strength are buried beneath the ocean wave annually as many of them follow are enjoying the blessings of earth, such as food, secure shelter from the beating storm, and invigorating sleep, the seamen are battling with the tempests, gales and tornados; sometimes for many hours and days without ness and thirst, sometimes overboard and after buffetting with the mad mountain wave for hours, sink to rise no more. Many families in this county mourn the loss of sons, fathers and brothers. Their requiem floats upon the wings of the tempest and mingles with the sighs of the sorrowful and stricken at home. But many are successful, and in a few years make money enough to purchase themselves farms, or set up other business which affords support and comfort. Most of the waterman from this county are strong temperance men, and many of them mem-bers of church and decidedly pious. There is very little litigation in the countv. and no lawyer residing within its limits. Dur county courts seldom ever sit longer than one day; our Jail is empty most of the year, and but seventeen or eighteen in the Poor house. We have a cancerene manufactory in this county which is producing quite an abundance of cancerine, which is said to be a good fertilizer. This is manufactured from the king crab, which are taken in great numbers during the summer months.

Sharkfishing too, has become quite a business here. One gentleman with a few hands has caught over 400 since last spring. These are taken for oil which is contained in the liver of the shark. A NEW YEAR.

To our patrons and friends we send greeting, our best wishes for your prosperity and happiness during the year which has just commenced - may you live to see many new years; and when the hand of Time shall have sprinkled the frosts of many winters o'er your bony skeleton, which all save the truly pious dread to encounter, but to whom all must finally surrender, shall claim you as his own. may your mortal tenements calmly repose beneath your native sod, overgrown by fragrant roses planted by some loved hand, who shall visit your grave when the balmy breezes waft their frugrant zepbyrs, and when the midnight stars look gently down upon thy friend's vigils, as she cons over thy virtues, and sighs for the loved and lost; and may thy spirit be walking the clysium bowers, where bloom perential flowers of which poets speak and christians hold in joyous anticipation. Another year has passed away, and with i' have gone many loved ones-many scenes of j y and sorrow have been enacted.

The young and blushing bride, who, one short year ago, stood at the bridal altar, with hopes as wide as the universe, leaning confidingly upon him whom she had chosen as her all, not dreaming that her life could be any. thing but happy, has seen that manly form laid away in its narrow tomb, and she who so lately was all joy and mirth, has doffed her bridal robes to don the weeds of widowhood.

The happy bushand who, at the beginning of last year, clasped the idol of his heart to his manly breast, has been called to impress affection's kiss upon her marble brow, and drop love's bitter tears upon her early grave.

The young mother, who one year ago, looked with that love a mother alone can feel, up- R. C. H." "Yankee Pedler." The sister, who doted on the manly virtues of a brother, now mingles a sister's tears with the canker ico which glitters by moonlight on his narrow bed.

Parents have laid their off-spring 'neath the sod; brothers and sisters have bid each other farewell; wives and husbands have taken the parting hand; friends and neighbors have separated to meet no more—some to toss on ocean's bring foam, some to far off climes, and others to that bourne from whence no traveler returns.

Our nation, too, has been called to pay its last sad tribute to a noble son-one who has shone in her Senate halls and figured in diplomacy-Clayton is no more!

For the West Jersey Pioneer. MR. EDITOR.—I was somewhat surprised and pained on looking over the proceedings of the "Sunday School" convention held in the M. E. Church at Millville, published in your paper of last week, to find a Resolution like the following:

"Resolved, That we regard the establishment of what are called Union Sunday Schools inexpedient; and we reccommend our people wherever it is practicable to mantain schools where Methodist doctrines can be specifically inculcated."

Now as there are several "Union Sabbath Schools" in the immediate vicinity of Bridgeton, where Teachers of different denominations meet together Sabbath after Sabbath, not to "inculcate specifically" the dostrines of the Baptist, Methodist or Presbyterian churches, but the doctrines of the Bible; their object being, not to introduce sectional. one price Clothing Store in Bridgeton, second ism or prejudices in these Schools; not to indoor above the Post Office, is now selling off stil into the minds of the young those feelings his stock of Winter Clothing to make room for of opposition and exclusiveness which charac-Spring Goods.
