GRATER AND FAST HORSES.

We invite attention to the communication of "Grasier" in another column... in response to one of our articles upon fast horses.

We are not to be understood as "exaggeratingly difficult" to find good reasons why horse raising should be patronized by Agricultural Societies.

Again, we ask how long that same mare must be used before she becomes manageable, and she tells us that "fast horses are generally gentle at anything on the farm."

Such as our friend may sneer at in the "lubberly" draft horses of the country, we think he would find it even more difficult than teaching "dull children" and editors, to prove that the horses celebrated for their great speed, could accomplish as readily as much labor in a given time.

Having utterly failed to show that a twenty, three minute or any fast speed was required in any department of farm labor, our correspondent makes a draft upon his imagination, and supposes a bug bear case of going after the doctor in a case of extreme peril.

But it seems our "judgment" as well as knowledge is deficient. Grasier says, "does not your judgment teach you better than to suppose farmers raise them (tomatoes) to cart five, six or seven miles to sell at fifteen cents per basket?"

I will give you some instances where fast horses are an advantage to farmers. One of my neighbors has an animal that can go a mile in three minutes—at $500 and up.

The high prices given and offered for such horses as John Henry and Black Hawk are adduced as evidence of the profit to be derived from agricultural premiums.

We have before stated that the expense of training and keeping such horses was such as to make it doubtful on which side the profit lay.

In training John Henry, a groom was kept with him on horse back, and the horse accompanied him on his journey.

It is not to be understood as "exaggeratingly difficult" to find good reasons why horse raising should be patronized by Agricultural Societies.

legitimate business. "Grasier" well knows that no industrial pursuit could pay at any thing like that price for horses to perform their labor.

Mr. Editor—In your issue of the 27th inst. you published an article upon fast horses, in which you mentioned that a pair of horses to do my light work and driving. I make it a rule to give them only light work.

Some of our best old farmers do not take it into account the proceeds of their farms; if they had done it "Killed Haines, perhaps, would have stood a poor chance for a prominent man."

In the Legislature there will undoubtedly be Democratic majorities in both houses giving a large majority to the meeting.
