Oh could I meet thee my husband again, Could I mingle once more my prayer with As our voices and hearts were wont to blend

Ah shall I c'er walk by thy loying side With a hand in thine as we used to roam. At balmy morn and at eventide, Conversing of days to come.

Shall I ever close to thy warm heart be, And lean my lone head on thy faithful breast, And hear the voice which was music to me? Shall ever I be thus blest? Not long hast thou been from me away,

Yet I've counted the days and thought the There has been less melody far for me In the sweet birds evening song! Less beauty too in the changing sky And blooming flowers, since thou art gone; I watch for thee with an anxious eye,

My best, my dearest one.

THE MILL PRIVILEGE.

TORE OF TOOR HO

In one af the towns of Maine, some thirty years ago lived a man named John Tatnall. He was a close-fisted digging man, and never sculped to make the best end of a bargain at all points within allowance of written law. He never hesitated to make capital of other people's necessities, an event that could put a dollar in his till, was all right to him. Once, a neighbor lost a fine ox, just at the time when he was in the midst of follfilling a contract for cutting down and hauling lumber. The contract was worth a thousand dollars, and he was to forfeit one half of it if he did not have all the logs in the river, before the snow melted in the spring.

The loss of his best ox would ruin him if he could not make his place good.—
He knew that Tatnall had plenty of oxen, and he went to him and stated his case.— Now, Tatnall had a number of oxen which he bought to place in a drove which he meant to drive to market; so he could have sold one as well as not. But be saw his neighbors necessity, and he meant to profit and next day after to-morrow I will see you by it. He would not sell unless he sold again." a pair, and not then without an enormous

The poor lumberman begged and entreated but it was of no avail. There was no other ox to be bought for miles and miles around, for Tatnall had bought them all up. The neighbor could not allow his work to lie still, so he paid Tatnal! full double what the oxen were worth and took them

Then it was that he happened to think of his odd ox. He knew it was better by was made famous by a thousand songs in far than either of those he had bought of the campaign of 1840. Yesterday morn. Tatnall, and he drove it over to the cattle Tutnall, and he dreve it over to the cattle dealer's to sell it.

Tatnall offered him twenty dollars for itjust one fifth of what he had obtained for the voke he had sold !

We will not tell all the conversation and bantering that followed, but suffice is to say that Tatnall got the ox and that in the cud and so lete its discovery, that the members he made a profit of just seventy five dolof the family barely escaped in their night lars out of his poor hard working neigh-

About two years previous to the penning of our story, some men had come to examin ethe fall of the river, and they talked of buying and building extensive nail works. Tatuall knew that if such was done the value of all the good land about him would be advanced, and he bought up all he could so that at present he owned not less than one thousand acres. One day in early spring, just as the ice had broken up, a man called on Tatnall and wished to examine the Mill privilege. His came was Lemuel Farnsworth and he was a young man not more than thirty years of age, full of enterprise and integrity. Mr. Tatuall accompanied his visitor out to the river, and after examining the premises, the latter expressed himself much pleasid with them.

"Ob," exclaimed Tatuall, "this is about the finest mill privilege in the State. The water cannot fail, and you see there would be power enough to drive a dozen mills." "I see," returned Farusworth; but he did not what he thought. He merely acknowledged that the privileg. w s good.

"If I buy here," he continued, "I should want some forty or fifty acres of land to go with the water lot, for I shall want lumber enough to put up all my buildings, and "You can have all you want," was Tatnall's reply, and shortly afterwards they returned to the house. "Now what's your price," asked Farns-worth after he had declined to take a glass of

"Then what would be your price?" "You mean for the mill privilege and the 0 acres of land. "Yes.

named Ridgely. They went out and looked the place all ver, and at length they concluded they would pay the seventeen hundred dollars .-It was a heavy sum—much more than the property was worth; but they had set their bearts upon building the mill in that section, and wished not to give it up.

"Ab, gentleman," said Tatnall with a bland smile, after their offer had been made, "that price was not a fixed one : that was ; sum named two days ago for acceptance or rejuction then. I gave no claim or refusal. cannot sell for that now."

"Are you in earnest." said Farnsworth. "I am most assuredly." "And for what will you sell now?"

You may have the whole for twenty-two hundred dollars. "But,' answered Ridgely 'this is monstrous. The mill may not return us a cent why, you will make more by the mills than

And then the circumjacent upland was good, being divided into undulating tracts, and bearing a heavy growth of oak and maple. But they were not prepared to pay a sum which they knew was only forced upon them from necessity. Many a man would have almost given them the mill privilege in consideration of the benefit that would thereby accrue to their property. The two young men pointed out to Mr. Tatnall all this; they told him they were going to embark their little all in the enterprise, and that they should have nearly all their money paid out if they gave him such a price for his property. But he cared not for that; all he wanted was their money.

The result of the conference was, that the young men wanted a week to consider the 'Very well,' said Tatnall, 'you can take as long as you like." But you won't raise your price again, ad. ded Farnsworth.

Don't know about that, was the response. Tite offer I have made is only open for to day. The two partners conversed togather in a a whisper, and for a few moments, they had a mind to accept Tatuall's offer. They saw that they were completely in his power, and they had read enough of his character. for to be assured that he would rob them of every penny they had, if he could do so under cover of the law. But the mill privilege would be valuable, to them—very valuable—and of this Farpsworth spoke.

I know, returned Ridgely: but you must remember that it is our energy and perseverence that will make it valuable.

So they went away, and left the matter for settlement in one week, we are in-like opened all. Mr. Tituall rubbed his hands when they

He first wished to know all their plans and they freely told him, for they knew he was not the man to overreach them. They told him of the saw mill, the grist mill, the clothing mill, and that they should probably put up a store, if people enough moved in to support one.

The next morning early, Mr. Tatuall was at Mr. Winthrop's door. He wanted to buy a large lot of interval woodland which lay next to his on the river. But Mr. Winthrop would not listen to anything of the kind. Mr. Tatuall hung on, for he felt sure of the mills being built upon his land, and he wanted all the neighboring lumber. He swore at Winthrop for his 'obsticancy,' but the latter only laughed.

Winthrop smiled at the account, and for the amusement of the thing, related the story of the ox. The millwrights and he knew that all this might have been upon his own land if he had been an honest honorable man. But it was too late now,— He could only look upon his own wilderness and upon the smiling lands of his neighbor, and the canker ate into his soul and made him miserable. In time the settlement extended up the river, and the stout trees upon John Tatuall's began to give place to houses and barns, and farms, but John Tatuall did not live to see it nor pront by it. His custing in and envy had killed him: and in the last hour the man who had all his life-time made it a rule of practice to overreach all with whom he had dealings, was himself overreached by that power against which no art can prevail. Those like Tatuall, take warning.

Having recovered his breath, he sercamed for help, and in order to retard the progsess of his assailant, began to shake the sapling, but bruin had elutched the branches with an iron grip, and evidently calculated upon a dainty morsel for break-fast, ann continued to raise paw after paw on the branches, till he approached so near as to be in almost reach. The poor lad screamed lustily, and endeavored to break off some of the branches by kicking them down with his bare feet. In this he partially succeeded, when the bear made a vigor-ous stretch of her muscles; and seized the lad by the foot, sinking one of her fangs under the ball of the great toe on the right foot, and slightly scratching the side of the foot with her other nipper teeth. At this juncture the shaking to and fro of the sap-ling with their united weight upon it, caused it to bend over until the top nearly touched the ground, when, providentially, the mon-ster lost his hold, and young Foster bravely ster lost his hold, and young Foster bravely clinging to his grasp with unshaken nerve, was elevated by the rising of the sapling.

Bruin, however, did not lose her determination to feast upon his body, and again sprang to the tree, but was evidently too much fatigued to rise on so slender a ladder. At this stage of the contest, the lad's father reached the spot, and saw the huge monster standing on her hind legs, her body extended up the tree, and growling flercely; the lad, nearly exhausted, clinging to the tree, only a few feet up, with the blood streoming from his lacerated foot. The Eulogy by Hon. L. Q. C. Elmer was an able production, manifesting much research and ability on the part of the speaker. Rev. S. B. Jones read two verses of the 90th Psalm, after which an address was delivered by Rev. N. C. Burt, a native of Fairfield. Mr. Burt, though but comparatively a young man, bids fair to rank among the most current Divines; his address on this occasion was of the most appropriate character, evidently originating from a well balanced and well stored mind, and falling as it did from lips fired with burning eloquence, produced an effect upon the assembled multitude such as is seldom witnessed. Fairfield may well be proud of such a son clothed in the garb of true nobility. The benediction being pronounced by Rev. J. M. Challis of Roadstown, Hon. L. Q. C. Elmer agin entertained the audience.

As one of our Cedarville correspondents has favored us with such an interesting production, descriptive of the exercises &c., we withhold further remarks.

STEAMBOAT EXCURSIONS.

Our citizens and others in this county have been highly favored this season with opportunities to erjoy themselves by participating in the pleasures afforded on the numerous excursions which have already taken place. The large party which left Bridgeton. for Greenwich, on Thursday afternoon last, in the Steamer Express, arrived there in good season, and could not but have had a delightful time among the hospitable friends of that charming section of the county. The after-noon was one of the most delightful for such an excursion. The return by moonlight. with such inspiring music as eminates from the "Bridgeton Sring Band," accompanied by the soul inspiring silvery voices of the fair, who always lend a charm to such occasions, could not fail to produce a grand effect. It will be seen by our advertising columns that there are to be two excursions from this place to Wilmington, next week. Preparations have been made to afford a delightful trip to all who avail themselves of such a privilege. The Express will make an excursion from here to Philadelphia, on Monday next, leaving at her regular hour; returning, leaves Philadelphia at 6 o'clock P.M., which will undoubtedly be a pleasant moonlight excursion. The attention of our friends in the country and adjoining counties, who intend going to the mass meeting at Salem. is particularly invited to the fact that they can in the boat.

TRACHERS INSTITUTE

The Cumberland County Teacher's Institute is holding its fourth annual session at Millville, under the charge of John B. Thompson, the State Agent of N. J. Teachcr's Association. The Institute was opened at 2 o'clock P. M., on Monday last, and the afternoon occapied with elocutionary exercises.

In the evening a large number of citizens and teachers instened to an able address upon the general subject of Education, from J. S. Van Dyke, Esq., of Princeton. He spoke of the advantages of a good education to the different professions and occupations of life, and to the mechanic, the agriculturist and the merchant.

In each of these three employments of mankind, education is the best capital, a fortune which cannot fail.

Some of the essentials of a thorough education, is a proper development of both mind and body, were then given and dwelt upon at length. Among these stood most prominent the important mjunction, learn to Each exercise occupied three fourths of an hour, and was followed by a recess of a quarter of an hour, most of which was occupied with music.

Mr. Van Dyke then delivered the introductory lecture of the course upon "Physical Geography." He mentioned some of the changes which our earth has undergone since its creation, and which it is still undergoing, explained the manner of formation of coraline and volcanic islands, of the Florida and Australia reefs, of the deltas at the mouths of many large rivers, and gave also an account of the most extensive submersions and upheavals of large tracts of land, concluding with numerous illustrations of the great law of nature, "constant changes" which Manufacturers, and Farmers.

The Scientific American has now reached its Fourzerstal Year, and will enter upon a New Volume on the 11th of September. It is the only weekly publication of the kind now issued in this country, and it has a very extensive exculation in all the States of the Union. It is not, as so no might suppose from its title, a dry, abstrace work on technical science on the contrary, it so deals with the great events going on in the scientific, mechanical and industrial words, as to please and instruct every one. I the Mechanic or Artizan wishes to know the best machine in use, or how to make any sub-tance employed in his business—if the House-wife wishes to get a recipe for making a good colst; &—it Six-Inventor. This is the Manufacturer wishes to keep in the way of imprograments—jithe Manufacturer wishes to keep hosted with the times, and to employ the best makines in his chainces—if the Manufacturer wishes to keep himself familiar with the progress make in the chemical, laboratory, or in the construction of telegraphs, steamships, railroads, reapers, movers, and a thousand other machines and appliances, inowers, and a thousand other machines and appliances, in the higher branches of science and art.

They are here presented in a reliable and idteresting form, adapted to the comprehension of minds unlearned in the higher branches of science and art.

HOVER'S LIQUID HAIR DYE.

The testimony of Prof. Booth and Dr. Brinkle having previously been published, the following is now dided:
From Prof. McCloskey, ormerly Professor of Theory and Practice of Medicine in the Fernale Medical College of Pennsylvania, and late Professor of Surgery in the American College of Medicine, &c.

Ma. Jessen E. Hoven — A trial of your LIQUID HAIR. Dye will convince the most skeptical that it is a safe, elegant, and efficacious preparation. Unlike many others, it has in several instances proved serviceable in the cure of some cutaneous expetitions on the head, and I have no hesitation in commending it to fuose, requiring such an application. Very respectfully.

HOVER'S WRITING INKS, including HUVER'S WRITING FLUID, and HOVER'S INDELIBLE INKS, still maintain their high character, which, has always distinguished them, and the extensive demand first created, has continued uninterrupted until the present.

Orders addressed to the Manufactory, No. 116 RAOF. Street, above FOURTH, Cold No. 141 Philadelphijis will receive present attention by document and applications. HOVER'S LIQUID HAIR DYE.
