For the West Jersey Pione er. ALL FOR THE BEST.

In my garden once I strayed When sweet June was reigning, Blossoms in their best arrayed-None of them complaining.

Till I saw a tea rose pale Low its leaves were bending, And its stem so tall and frail Little strength seemed lending.

In the gardens midst it grew 'Mong some smaller flowes, In their shade its tears it threw Over them in showers.

"White rose weeping all the day Fragrant, dew-drop tears," Said a lily in its way,

"Tell me what thy fears" Low the sad rose drooped its head-Flashed its green leaves lower, While with quivering voice it said-"In my native bower

(Where the rose exotics bloom) I beside my mother Never felt a shade of gloom, Never loved another.

Lanquish I in sadness Where the cutting winds I fear-Death would bring me gladness. Then I heard sweet music ring,

Like an anthem holy,

"But they tore me from her, -here

"Gentle rose, look up and sing, For thy good 'twas-solely. "In you cluster never sun On your roots beamed warm, Here to shelter, there is none

That can do the harm" " Lainty lily-thanks to thee," Said the ten rose slowly, "Ne'er shall be forgot by me-God careth for the lowly.'

MAY MYRTLE. New Castle, January 21, 1859.

From Harper's Monthly Magazine. ETHAN ALLEN AND HIS DAUGHTER.

[. She was a lovely, pious, young woman, whose mather, then long in the spirit land, had instructed her in the truths of the Bible. When she was about to die, she called her father to her bedside, and, turning upon him her pale face, lighted up by lustrous blue eyes, she said, with a sweet voice: Dear father, I am about to cross the cold, dark river Shall I trust to your opinions, or to the teachings of my dear mother?'-These words, like a keen arrow, pierced the re-cesses of his most truthful emotions. Trust to your mother." said the champion of infidelity; and, covering his face with his hands, he wept like a child."- Harper's Monthly for November.

"The damps of death are coming fast, My father, o'er my brow. The past with all its scenes has fled, And I must turn me now To that dim future that in vain My feeble eyes descry;

Tell me, my father, in this hour In whose stern faith to die? "In thine? I've watch'd thy scornful smile, And heard thy withering tone, Whene'er the Christian's humble hope

Was placed above thine thine own; I've heard thee speak of coming death Without a shade of gloom.

And laugh at all the childish fears That cluster round the tomb.

Or is it in my mother's faith? How fondly do I trace Through many a weary year long past That calm and saintly face!

How often do I call to mind. Now she is 'neath the sod, The place—the hour—in which she drew My early thoughts to God!

"Twas then she took this sacred book And from its burning page Read how its truths support the soul In youth and failing age:

And bade me in its preceipts live, And by its precepts die, That I might share a home of love In worlds beyond the sky.

" My father, shall I look above, Amid this gathering gloom, To Him whose promises of love Extend above the tomb? Or curse the Being who hath bless'd

This checkered path of mine; Must I embrace my mother's faith, Or die, my sire, in thine?"

The frown upon the warrior-brow Passed like a cloud away. And tears coursed down the ragged cheek That flowed not till that day; "Not-net in mine"-with chock ing voice The skeptic made reply,

But in thy mother's hely faith, My daughter, may'st thou die!" C. C. COX.

A youth and maid, one winter night, Were sitting in the corner; His name, we'er told, was Jeshua White, And hers was Patience Warner.

Not much the pretty maiden said, Beside the young man sitting; Her obecks were flushed a rosy red, Her eyes bent on her knitting.

Nor could he guess what thoughts of him Were to her bosom flocking,

As her fair fingers, swift and slim, Flew round and round the stocking

While, as for Joshua, bashful youth, His words grew few and fewer; While all the time, to tell the truth,

His chair edged nearer to her. Meantime her ball of yarn gave out, She knit so fast and steady; And he must give his aid, no doubt,

To get another ready. He held the skein; of course the thread Got taugled snarled, and twisted; "Have Patience!" cried the artless maid,

To him who her assisted. Good chance was this for tongue-tied churl To shorten all palaver; 'Have Patience!" cried he, " dearest girl!

And may I really have her?"

The deed was done; no more, that night, Clicked needles in the corner:-And she is Mrs. Joshua White That once was Mrs. Warner.

PLAYING IN THE PUDDLES.

On the birth day of Napoleon Charles, son of Lewis Napoleon and Horteuse, and a child whom the Emperor Nupoleon meant to make his heir, he and his mother were scated at a window in the palace which opened upon the grand avenue. A heavy shower had fallen, and the avenue was full of pools of water. A group of barefooted children were out there wading in the water, and playing with little chip boats. The young prince, richly dressed, in a splendid hall, and surrounded by his elegant and costly birth-day presents, turned carclessly ren with eager interest.

"So then, my son," said his mother, you are not grateful for your presents?" "Oh, yes," replied the young prince, but I am so used to toys. Look at those little boys, mamma."

"Do you wish for money to give them?" "Papa gave me enough this morning" "Well, what ails you, my child? What

o you want?'' "Oh said the young prince, he sita ting y I know you wont let me, but if I could go and play in those beautiful puddles, it would amuse me a hundred times more than all my olegant presents."

What a noble opportunity is now offered to the Christian physician to show a kindness as far superior to any he has ever shown, as the concerns of the soul are superior to those of the body! Oh let him not fear prudently to reveal a truth for which the patient may bless him in eternity. Is it not sometimes to be ferred that, in the hope of prolonging, for a little while, the existence of the perishing body, he robs the never-dying soul of its last chance of pardon? Col. James A. Wall, of Burlington, will deliver the 4th lecture of the course, in Sheppard's Town Hall, on Thursday evening, the 17th inst. The subject chosen by him for that occasion, is one of general interest, and as the Col. is a highly educated scholar, and perfect gentleman, all who have the pleasure of hearing him, will undoubtedly be highly gratified with the entertainment. This is, probably, the only opportunity that will be offered our citizens of hearing this distinguished speaker in Bridgeton, the present

Two lectures, after the one announced above, will complete the course. All the previous ones of this course, have given general satisfaction to those who have listened to them, and it is to be hoped that sufficient encouragement will be given, to warrant the engagement of equally eminent speakers, for the last of the course. The price of tickets has been reduced to 15 cents, which will afford all an opportunity to attend.

Lecture at Millville.

The lecture delivered at Millville on the 27th ult., for the benefit of the Sabbath School connected with the Second M. E. Church, was very well attended, though the evening was unusually dark and stormy.

The meeting was opened with singing by the scholars, and prayer by the Rev. Mr. Crate; after which the President, Mr. Thomas, introduced to the audience as the lecturer | the ordinary gossip and tattle, which too freof the evening, John S. Mitchell of Bridgeton, who announced "Patriotism" as the subject of his lecture.

The lecture was about an hour in length it contained animated allusions to the history of Europe, and to the many distinguished personages who in former years lived upon that continent. and whose names have been handed down to us as lovers of their country. The references to the heroes of Scot land, to Wallace and Bruice, and their compatriots, those gallant spirits who led the Scottish clans against their foes, and who willing at every emergency to sacrifice all they held dear, for the love of the land cles might be made to do much toward corwhith gave them birth, may be classed among the most attractive features of the discourse.

Time will not allow us to give the various heads of the lecture the more lengthy notice they deserve. The conclusion was of a practical character. The lecturer made an by all means encourage these gatherings, for earnest appeal to Americans of the present day, who above the inhabitants of any other land, should appreciate what true patriotism is, and that, when aided by energy and perseverence under vicissitudes, it can accomplish. He said, that there was work for paing this, and improving the social condition country; as the hero that died gloriously on the field of battle. The lecture was listened to with attention throughout; and the auwell satisfied with the evening's entertain-ment. for one year's subscription to the Pioneer.— Try them.

Fun and Rowdyism in Bridgeton. There is as wide a distinction between fun and rowdyism, as there is between innocent pleasure and malignant gratification. He who cannot take a good joke, even though it be cracked at his own expense, smile at the ludicrous, or enjoy a hearty laugh, when occasion calls for it, is devoid of those happifying bumps, designated by the Phrenologist, as the organs of mirthfulness. Illustrations of the above characteristics are occurring daily in every town and community. On Monday evening last, a foreigner who was dilating upon the merits of his medicine, which, according to his version, was a certain remedy for all the ills that flesh is air to, while entertaining a large crowd, who stood listening with eager gaze, while he, "As the shades of night were falling fast" perched in a wagon, without any hoss, cried at the top of his voice, "going! going! gone!"" Before the last note died o'er the western hill, (across the bridge) the mischievous boys, always ready for fun, started off with the wagon, man, medicine and all, and landed him in the hotel yard, where wagon and medicine, if not man and all, descreed to be. The crowd shouted with joy, while the man, with hat in hand, shouted going! going! gone! About that time we left.

On Tuesday night, at eleven o'clock, near the same spot, as we were passing home from our office, a crowd of rowdies came rushing along the sidewalk, making night hideous with their unearthly yells and groans. The next day we learned that a number of signs had been defaced, and that several young ornamental trees, along the sidewalk where these rowdies had been carousing, were entirely destroyed. They had lately been set out by Mr. Davis, and enclosed with treeboxes. This is a specimen of rowdyista seldom practiced in this town, and the villians who were guilty of such conduct, should not be permitted to run at large. The Marshall who is generally about to check such midnight brawlers, was not on hand, or the cow. ardly depredators would have retreated to their dens.

Social Parties.

Now, while business is dull, and the travelling so execrable, is a good time for social and mental cultivation. The long evenings afford a fine opportunity for social gatherings. Reading circles for mutual improvement and instruction, are fashionable in some quarters, and have, perhaps, as little in them really objectionable, as any other form of social gathering. To be a good reader, is an accomplishment but few posses. These circles when rightly conducted, are well calculated to improve in that delightful art, whilst at the same time a large amount of useful instruction can be gathered from the subjects read. The discussion of these matters would add another feature of the highest character, and form together a combination of moral, social, and ratellectual enjoyment, unequalled, perhaps, by any of the usual modes of gratification. The mingling of the sexes tends to produce refinement in both, whilst at the same time it promotes the moral character of the entertainment. The subjects read and discussed would furnish intellectual food for the mind, and serve to elevate it above quently prevail at social gatherings, where the subjects of conversation are limited to local matters, many of them; too frequently. better left untold. That is a good maxim which directs us to say nothing of another. if we cannot speak in their favor. By accustoming ourselves to hearing and sneaking ill of our neighbors, we keep constantly before the mind a succession of deformed pictures of humanity, which have an insensible influence over us, in forming our own character and habits. The mind may be "fed on poisons till they have no power to harm, but become a kind of nutriment." Reading cirrecting this. The habit of silence imposed in listening to the reader, and the attention necessary to obtain the ideas of the author. would keep the mind too completely employed for the time, to be indulging in impurity of action. Christian philanthropists should

LOSSES ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

A statement has recently been made of the losses sustained on the Mississippi durthe past year, by which it appears that fortyseven steamboats have been sunk, nineteen ted in the Association; and of which the burnt, and nine destroyed by explosions.-The number of lives lost by these disasters, is supposed to be about two hundred and fifty, and the value of property lost, including the boats, about two millions of dollars. If this could be taken as a fair average of the loss, annually sustained by our internal and for. eign commerce, it would show a frightful per cent of loss entailed upon the business of the country. Fortunately it is not. The causes which most endanger life and property on the Mississippi, do not exist on our eastern waters. Of the seventy five boats lost, the forty seven sunk, and part of those burned, may be traced directly to the snags, sawyers, logs and other obstructions, by which the navigation of the river is impeded. There have been beavy freshets during the past year, which have undoubtedly served to deposit a large number of these obstructions in the river. The shores are low, and appear n many places to be very quick-sandy, so that large trees are undermined and carried down the stream, where one end becomes embedded, leaving the other in a position extremely dangerous to boats. The channel is, moreover, constantly changing, and is withal very narrow, compelling the boats so nearly to follow the same track, as to be in constant danger of collission . A knowledge of these facts should lead us to mitigate, somewhat, the charge of carelessness and recklessness so generally indulged against the pilots and engineers on that river. It is a long trip from New Orleans to St. Louis, besides being the entire distance against a powerful current, requiring of course the very best machinery. Even with that, it is not surprising that explosions sometimes occur. In ddition to the loss of life above stated, it is estimated that no less than one thousand are annually lost overboard accidentally. If this is true, the Mississippi is one vast charnnel house. Twelve hundred and fifty lives, and two million dollars worth of property, is pretty considerable item for one stream .-

The prospects of annexing Cuba to the United States look dark. Spain is determined not to part with the smallest portion of her territory under any circumstances whatever, and declares that she considers every proposition for its acquisition a gross insult to the Spanish people. As long as she continues of this opinion it is folly for the leading men of our nation to tax their brans any longer upon this subject. Further attempt to acquire it would only be adding fuel to the flame which has already been kindled in Spain, and render its acquisition still more doubtful.

t is devoutly to be hoped it has no equal

The Difficulties of Composition. One of the most venerated of your town did me the honor to present me with an elegant copy of the Rev. Gilbert White's His tory of Selborne, and requested I would write something of the kind of the things of my own neighborhood. I have read the book, which is more of the effusions of nature, than the labor of art, with an interest unlike that I have felt for any other, until if I except Robinson Crusoe, I have none more thoroughly thumbed, and yet I am unable to understand why it is so wonderfully charming, and what it contains more than the simplest description of the simplest things. It is so childlike that you will be continually reminded of old times, and of common things which you have seen all your life; and, when you have read it an hour, you feel as though you too could write with just as much ease, as are these letters to his friends, upon the birds, trees, flowers, and fields which are about you, and yet when you have taken the pen, and made tho attempt, you will find yourself en lowed with no such faculty. You will inquire what there is in the composition so difficult? Where is its great beauty? Why it is so gracefully graphis. The book is such as report to the Board, when required, and to none but a good, wise, and educated man of heart could write, and if we will consider how few who write books aro all this, we will not be surprised that good books are so rare Occasionally we meet one that will stop us let us meet it where we will. Of these might name "the Dairyman's Daughter," Bunyan's writings, and some others, all of which were written so easily that their authors were the last to suppose they had done much. Perhaps the attainment of high art in composition is the faculty of writing so as to describe, or paint things as if they were really before us, till we forget it is a more description, and lel as if we saw the thing itelf. If one could so describe a tree, as to cause others who read the description to each month, for the proposal and election of feel as if they had it before them in all its dignity and beauty, with its waving boughs and consideration of such information as and glistening leaves, and sturdy trunk; while they would imagine they could hear Sect 2.-There shall be an annual meet- the winds mouning through its branches, or see the birds fitting from limb to limb, he would do more than any but the few of the most gifted have done Difficult as is the task, perhaps most who write think they Sect 3 .- Fifteen members shall consticould describe a tree. Of all the books that have ever been written there has been none which so interests little children as shall be opened by the reading of the Scrip- "Mother Goose." All children love it, and appointed to select a site have reported in tures and by prayer; and closed with singing many know it by heart. Yet no one could favor of the construction of an island, five well tell the reason, except that it is natural. It is very old and may be as old as Esop's Fables, which were written 60) years before our Saviour was upon the earth. And what is more naturally simple than Esop's Fables? Where is there one so learned or so simple as not to like them?-It is the same in composition as in characmake his defence to the Board and to the ter, and manners. Who dees not love the graceful, natural, unpretending creature. who represents nothing but reality? The face which indicates no guile, which is ex-> could be bestowed without it, could not go. Like the composition of which I have spoken, we occasionally meet a human being without any extraordinary sense, who will win us till we are entirely in love with her or him, and yet we cannot make up our minds why they are so winning, or what is win its way where education, and all that the attraction . Children almost universally are interested with writings that depict natural feelings, and consequences, and if men are not, it is only because they have been spoiled by false education. There are more persons spoiled by endeavoring to be what some one else is, or bay." affecting that which is foreign to themselves, than perhaps any other way. For a long time I determined to write of the things I had been requested, not as plain ' Sancho Panza," but as the Rev. Gilbert White: thus I tried my hand for awhile, until I found that there was no Gilbert White in me, and that if I wrote at all, I must do it without much regard to what he had so beautifully written. I offer these remarks as a preface to what may follow. and as an apology to my good friend for my apparent long neglect, and in answer to your late request for me to write something. Cape May, N. J. The Tribune describes the locality as follows: "The shoal is on the south side of Staten Island, lying perhaps half a mile from a loug. low sandy peninsula, which can never be in habited and between which and the main land of the Island is a body of water of probably three fourths of a mile in width. The nearest point on the Islan I on which a house is ever likely to stand -as much of the shore in that neighborhood is swamp-is, then between one and two miles from the proposed Quarantine ground, so that it may be considered for all practical purposes, as com, pletely insolated as it is possible to be and vet be at all accessible. It is six nautical miles porth-west from the point of Sandy Hook, four miles north east from the light at the Narrows, four miles west of the main ship channel, and four and a half northwestfrom the Spit. Vessels drawing twelve feet of water can anchor within a mile and a half of the ground, and those drawing twenty feet within two miles. It will be evident from this description of the locality, that the right place has been chosen. It is near enough to the track of vessels bound into port; it is far enough off to be innocuous to the inhabitants of the surrounding country, and it has the best anchorage in the lower

The cost of constructing the island in the Bay for the Quarantine is estimated at $135,000.

"Turned up Again."

On the day after Christmas a youngster named Clayton H. Page, residing at Mount Holly, New Jersey, was furnished by his father with a ten dollar note, and permitted to come to Philadelphia to spend the holidays. The youngster joyfully accepted the permission, and arrived in this city, where his ten dollars soon melted into nothingness. The young ter being a boy of pluck, and disliking to return home without being able satisfactorily to account for the disbursement of his funds, formed a determination to earn more before returning to the parental domicile. Meanwhile his parents became very anxious concerning him, and advertised him as missing in the daily papers. All this, however, failed to point out his whereabouts, and within a few days past the parents advertised a reward of a hundred dollars for definite information concerning their missing boy. While all this was in progress young Page was working for a farmer in Delaware, to whom he had hired himself. The farmer takes the papers, compared the boy with the published description of him, and wrote to Mount Holly, claiming the reward. We suppose that hy this time be has been mode richer by the sum of $190, while the youngster has returned a wiser and better boy.

A new cent has recently been struck at the Mint in Philadelphia, and is represented to be a decided improvement on the montrosity now in cicrulation. It is of the same size, and composed of the same metal, as the old cent: has a wreath surrounding the legend "One Cent," but the obverse has fortunately discarded the hideous and screeching bird of prey with which the old cent was disfigured, and its place has the head of an Indian woman with a coronal of feathers, and in the band the noble word of LIBERTY.

"SPARE THAT GIRL." Youngster, spare that girl!
Kiss not those lips so meek! Unruffled let the ringlets ourl Upon the maiden's cheek! Believe her quite a saint!

rrom the Hon. Horace Mann, LL.D. President of Autioch College.

The rising generation will be greatly benefitted, both in the accuracy and extent of their information, should your work be kept as a book of reference on the table of every professor and teacher in the country. From J. Addison Alexander, D. D., Princeton C. Hege. "On the subject of geographical orthography and orthogry, thus is not the best, but the only systematic work with which I am acquainted. The principles propounded in the "Introduction" are founded on a thorough and extensive knowledge of the subject, so far as I am capable of judging. Their application in the body of the work of judging. Their application in the doty of the work appears to me judicious and successful. In examining this portion of the work, I have received an indirect an indirectal, but very strong impression of its creat Superiority in Edmoss and Accuracy to any dictionary of geography with which I am acquainted." From Dr. B. Sears, President of Brown University Your work must prove an invaluable guide to the student of geography, and if generally adopted could not fail to remove that discrapancy and confusion which now so generally provid in regard to the pronunciation of geographical names."

so generally previous of Sacred Literature in Andoren C. E. Stowe, Professor of Sacred Literature in Andover Theological Seminary.

This is a great work, and executed with immense labor and consumate ability. It would be difficult to find another volume in the English language which contains in the same space, an equal amount of important, well-digested, and clearly expressed information. The Pronunciation and the Etymological Vocabulary are new features in a work of this kind, and the first is as convenient and useful as the last is learned and curious. In these days of stirring events and newspaper circulation, I see not how the office or the counting room, the family or the school, can anywhere afford to do without this book."

From Prof. David N. Camp, Connecticut Normal Scho "It is an encyclopedia of geography in itself, and the pronunction of geographical names, as well as the description of places, will render it very valuable as a reference-book for the school-room and for the library of every teacher and general reader."

From Prof. Dana P. Colburn, Principal of R. I. State Normal School. mal School.

"In addition to its great value as a standard to pronunciation, and the fulness and accuracy of its statistics, its articles are very full and complete, and remarkably well arranged for convenience and reference. I can unhestantical to a result of the state of the mmend it as an excellent be atingly recommend to as an exceler and every school places in the library of every teacher and every school places in the library of every teacher and every school places in the library of every school places. BUCKEYE POTATOES. THIS new variety of Potatoes was first introduced and planted in Monmouth County, in the Spring of 1857, the success which attended their first planting, was so remarkable that nearly the whole product of that year was sought and planted by farmers in different sections of the County the following year, and the demand so great that absolutional supply was necessary, and large quantities wfre ngain brought from other localities, to supply that demand. The puality of the Potato is such that it has already taken its place among the Standard varieties, and must eventually supercede all other older varieties, on account of their productiveness and good quality—They are an early variety, ripening sufficiently early to enable the farmer to dig them in time to prepare his ground in time to sow wheat and other grain. Another feature in favor of these potatoes is, they have never been known to be affected by the rot or blight, and where other varieties have been affected by the rot and fallen far shors of an average crop, they have not only escaped, but abundantly rewarded the farmer for his labor, and the demand is still on the increase. They seem adapted to all kinds of soil where it is proper to grow potatoes, but their yield will vary according to the quality of the soil, and on the same ground where the Mercer have yielded but 50 bushels per acre, with the same attention, and in some instances 300 bushels have been produced.

The "Buckeyes" took the first premium at the Monmouth County Agricultural Fair, and at the State Fair at Trenton, this year.
