THE MINER'S DAUHGTER.

Mary-, was born in one of the mining districts of England, and at an early age came with her parents to America. Her father, like many others of his class, was of Her prayer was, a roving disposition, and to the discomfort of his family, frequently changed his residence: sometimes they would be located in the mountainous regions, near to the mines, in which the father labored : at others, they would be the inmates of a small tenement in a narrow street of the populous city; while the miner, wearied with his laborious occupation, left it, to become the proprietor of a small tavern. Here many of his counrymen met to drink and carouse, or to witness the pugilistic encounters of those sporttheir skill in the miscalled "mauly art."

The miner, himself, was somewhat notorious for his prowess in the ring, and when under the influence of the demon intemperance, his extreme profanity and pugnacious disposition made him an object of dread.

Years pass by, bringing many changes to the family of the miner :- A new mother is installed in the place of the departed, and some of the children marry and leave home. The afficied daughter has so far recovered her strength, as to be able to travel, and she leaves her home to visit an elder sister, married and living in a neighboring state, with whom it is arranged that Mary should spend the Winter. The providence of God, which had brought her safely all her journey through, so ordered events, that her abode was almost opposite the Sanctuary, so that without fatigue or expesure she could attend upon the stated means of grace. The people of God were waiting upon Him nightly for prayer and supplication in the Lecture room of the Church, which was filled with those whose earnest cry was, "O Lord, revice thy work."

The divine presence soon became mani fest, and " the place of his fect was made glorious" by reason of his stately steppings in the midst of his people. The hearts of Christians melted and flowed together, while mingled tears of penitence and joy coursed their way down the cheek. Prayer and exhortations were offered amid tears and sobs, and the songs of those who were joyful in the Lord, "filled his courts with sounding praise." Careless and thoughtless men and women, were drawn by a secret, irresistible power to the place of prayer, and in many cases were seized with deep conviction, almost upon their seats, unable to hide their emotion.

Many were led to exclaim, "Surely the

Of what little importance to society is the mere man of the world! He commences his routine in the morning, reads his newspaper, talks upon business and politics, goes the round in his daily track of labouring, bartering and selling, and inquiring what news, and pretty much fills up the balance of his time in cating, drinking and sleeping. When old age overtakes him, having lived without God in the world, nothing appears to interest him but the long-cherished ideas of business, and the security of his property. He rejects the solemn subiect of religion and salvation, looks upon its most conscientious professors as governed by unagination; and if he does not orally deny the truths of the Bible, his life shows they have little influence upon him. If he has religious connections and friends, they secretly deplore his destitution of the oil of the kingdom, and the little real comfort his society affords. His emptiness of the "one thing needful," gives them many painful apprehensions; and when he goes down to the grave, they have no cheering evidence that he had any sustaining interest in the Lord Jesus, or any solid ground for hope of admission into his everlasting kingdom among the blessed. Such instances should be solemn warnings to survivors. -The Parsuit of Riches.

Christian Obedience not Servitude.

To obey with the whole heart, in other words, to obey as Christ would have us, is essentially the same as to be perfectly resigned to the will of God; having no will but his. And he must have strange notions of the interior and purified life, who supposes that the obedience which revolves constantly and joyfully within the limits of the Divine Will, partakes of the nature of servitude. On the contrary, true obedience, that which has its seat in the affections, and which flows out like the gushing of water, may be said, in a very important sense, to possess not only the nature, but the very essence of freedom .- Thomas C. Upham.

THE DYING MAN .- At the close of life. the dying man beholds with anguish that his days are finishing, when his preparation for eternity is hardly commenced .-

PLEASURES OF SIN.—Let none of us content ourselves with the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season, a little season indeed, and lose our own souls, and be shut out of the paradise of God. - Marshall.

THE GIPSIES.

A few tents of these miserable and hal sivilized creatures are scattered about in different parts of this and the adjoining counties. Wandering about from place to place, without any settled habitation, filthy in their habits, uncleasely in their persons, and extremely loose if not licentions in their morals, making not only a scanty living, but even boarding some money by their bereditary and traditionary characters as fortune tellers, horse jockeys and tinkers, and possessing and speaking a jargon of their own, understood only by themselves, assimilating or intermarrying with no other race, they are by no means a desirable population. For centuries they have rouncd through every country of Europe, the terror and dread of the superstitions in the rural districts, consulted and feared by old and young. Amid the astonishing changes and improvements of the age, -surrounded with the sublimest works of art, and the brightcat conceptions of genius, eye wituesses of the enlightening, the wonderful influences of steam and electricity, of labor-saving machines and insentives to skill, roaming constantly amid the comforts, the luxuries and elegancies of life, their character remains every where the same. Stolid, exclusive, crafty, intriguing, restless, avaricious and unfeeling, they continually excite a distrust of their presence without enkindling the ception in this beverage. All who purchase Alexandria (Va.,) Sentinel, of this morning, least epark of sympathy or kindly feeling, throughout the whole range of the civilized world.

Unchecked by moral or religious restraints or convictions, and regarding the world outside of their own sect as their lawful prey, and ready to stoop to any fraud, however base, provided they can escape detection, they are a dangerous "element" for any state of society where the supremacy of law and order is not regarded and upheld as paramount. They were long, but later research of pilforing. We can hardly believe this charge true to any considerable extent -They are already objects of suspicion, and unless they confined their depredations to articles that could be speedily consumed, their detection, from their peculiar habits and appearance, must be almost certain.

Leading the exposed lives they do, it is really wonderful, that amid the changeful vicissitudes of our climate, they do not perish either by discase or the severity of the winter cold.

Idle and discolute themselves, they attract all of that character around them every where they go. Addiag nothing to the wealth or industry of the country, but vagrants in the most literal sense of the term. and contaminating others by their example, they ought not to be encouraged in any community. Still, we would not have them treated unkindly, or roughly. A "severe letting alone," entire non-intercourse, and means in our judgment the best. Notwithstanding the dark picture drawn of their character, there is much in their history to interest and instruct the student of human nature. Unavailing efforts to introduce the Bible and Christianity among them, have repeatedly been made. The "Bible in Spain," "The Gipsies of Spain," and "Savengro" by George Borrow, the "Gipsy Priest," are works that will repay a perusal and awaken an interest in the destiny of tue wayward race.
