COT A WIFE.

"Tobacco is the tomb of love," writes a modern novelist of high standing; but with every respect for his authority, I beg to say it was quite the contrary in my case.

Twenty one years ago, I was sitting by my fireside, dotting up innumerable pages of my bachelor's housekeeping book, taking exercise in arithmetic on long colums of 'petty cash"-comprising items for carrois and Bath bricks, metal tacks and mutton chops—until, tired and wearied, I arrived at the sum total, and jerked the book on the mantel-piece. Nearly at the same time I placed my hand in the pocket of my dressing gown, drew out a leather case, and lite Principe. Well, having lit the Principe. Well, having lite the Principe. Well have literated the have cipe, I placed my feet on the fender, and sighed, exhausted by my long job of do-mestic accounts. I was then in business— 'twas a small wholesale business then. 'tis a large one now-yet one morning's totting of carrots and Bath-bricks, of metal tacks and mutton chops, would tire me a thousand times more than twenty four hours of honest ledger-work. I signed, not from love, but from labor; for, to tell you tho truth, I had never been in love. Is this to go on forever? thought I, as I took my third whiff, and looked dreamily through the thin smoke as it ascended between me and a large print of the capture of Gibral tar, which hung over the chimney-piece -Am I to spend my prime in totting up parsnips, and computing carrots, and comptrolling washing-bills? I sighed again, and in the act, off flew the button of my neck band, as though some superior power had seasonably sent the accident to remind me of my helplessness

The button settled the business; though, as it slipped down inside my shirt, and pas sed with its mother o' pearl coldness over ney heart, it for a moment threatened to chill my matrimonial resolution. I pitied my own lonely state, and pity, we know, is be accomplished? Most men at my age would already have adjusted their inclina tion to some object; so that having made up their mind and counted the cost, little more would have remained to be done than to decide upon the day, and lay hold upon the license. This, however, was not the case with me. I had been too much occupied, too idle, or too indolent, to devote the time or make the effort to " form an attach. ment." It was through no disinclination or difficulty to be pleased; for had any young lady of moderately agrecable powers taken the trouble, she might have married nie long cre then. Accordingly, I thought of an advertise ment, yet with no practical design of doing business, but, as I persuaded myself, for a joke So I scrate sed with a pencil on the back of a letter, the following:

And such an end is often reached from the most trifling beginnings. Two little boys once became so angry about whirling a top, that one killed the other. Alexan ier the Great, in a fit of passion, slew a farthful attendant, which grieved him so afterwards that he could with difficulty be kept from self-marder. Herod the Great was a man of such passions that no one about him was secure of his life. And the writer has personally witnessed such storms of passion that he was led to say, though you may hardly all restraint from such passions and you will I remained in at my hotel next day, until have a hell upon earth, in which it would these things, young men should constantly control their tempers. The wise man says, he that is angry dealeth foolishly. Let not come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to them urge our young men to deal wisely. -Anger may enter the breast of a wise man, but it will rest only in the bosom of a fool. 3. Be industrious, prudent, saving. Idleness was one of the lealing sins of Sidom, which led to its sad end. It will clocke a man with rags, while the hand of the dili gent maketh rich. A dollar carned is worth many inherited.

Our young men should care when they are young, to spend, if they live, whon they are old; curn when they are well, to spond when they are sick; earn when they can, to spend when they must. It we would have he smiles of Providence, we should contribute to the various causes of benevolence. and we would know the luxury of giving, we should know the pleasure of carning first. What we give to the Lord, is laid up for a time of need-and happy are those who, in this way, place much in the Lord's safe keeping. Learn to spend prudently upon your person, and in your pleasures, in order to give liberally unto the Lord.r And here permit me to say, take good care of what you get. Many things, thus cared for, will last a life-time which would not otherwise last a year. The writer has seen a little broom with which the owner, of whom it was said dirt would not stick to him, had dusted his clothes for twenty six years, and it looked as if it might do good service vet. While those who are industrious, saving, prudent, will usually have enough without being niggardly; those who speud as they can when the evening of it comes ou.

4. Be pure. "Keep thyself pure," says Paul to Timothy; and does he not say the like to every young man? Be pure in thought, speech and behavior. Blessed are the pure in heart," "they shall see God" "ascend his holy hill, and stand it his holy place." The vices that are opposed to puri iy, injure the body and mind. Avoid profanity. It is forbidden of God, and the use of it is proof of a depraved heart. Those words that we sometimes hear in our stree: and elsewhere, do not come from a pure heart. It is no mark of a gentleman to swear. The worthless and the vile can swear as well as the best educated and the best dressed. Profanity does no good. No one is the richer, wiser, or happier for it .-It is disgusting to the refined, and abominable to the good. Our actions also should be pure as well as our words. 5. Do not be given to change of employment. Make your employment honorable instead of running after one to make you honorable. Many wish to palm their shiftlessuss off upon their employments, and are constantly running after employment to enrich them and make them honorable; while others are bonoring the employment these have left, and getting rich by them. Choose un employment to which you are adapted, and then, as a general thing adhere to it, but never follow one that does not, in some way, contribute to the general good. There are those who live upon the life-blood of others without contributing to the general

But if we cannot avoid harming the world ! as we pass through it, it were better to slip away to our graves as soon as we can get ready for them.

6. Be careful to form good habits. Many roung men thoughtlessly contract those sume their time, empty their pockets, undermine their health, and shorten their days.

At first unture rebels against them, then those that are sound.

8. Be kind and dutiful to parents. Those cannot expect to prosper who are not. 9. Be forgiving. How bright in this popish ceremonies, in his dying nours, is respect is the example of Christ, who prayed for his murderers on the cross! How precious his instructions-"Forgive and ye grace, have done the same .- Milner's shall be forgiven." And how he taught us to pray: "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors"

10. Be cheerful. God loves the man that can sing at his work, whatever it be, and not be cast down by trials. Finally, seek above every thing clse, an interest in Jhrist. Take the Bible for your conpanion and guide; study its models of parity, especially the character and example of Christ. Shun its examples of depravity, which are placed on its sacred page as beacons to warn you. Be meulied by its precep s. When Wilberforce lay upon his dying pillow, he said to a dear frient, "Sit near me. Let me han upon you. Do not weep for me; do not weep. I am very happy .-Tuink of me, and may the thought make you press forward. I never knew happiuess till I found Christ. Read the Biblelet no religious book take its place.-Through all my perplexities, I never read any other. I never knew the want of any other. It has been my hourly study. All my knowledge of the doctrines, all my acquaintinge with the experience and realities of religion, have been derived from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion are useful, but we must not substitute them for the simple truths of the Bible."

If young men will follow this advice of the dying philanthropist, they may hope to be "happy," "very happy," in the dying hour and forever. R. T.

Let me beseech you, by the love and mercy of Ged, by the life and death of Christ, by the power of his spirit, and the hope of immortality, you whose hearts are established in your temporal comforts, and are lovers of self more than of these beavenly things, let the time past suffice : think it not enough to be clear of such impleties, as too many are found in, whilst your in me dinate love of lawful things has defiled your enjoyment of them, and drawn your hearts from the fear, love, obedience, and self donial of a true disciple of Christ. Turn about, then, and hearken to the still voice in thy conscience; it tells thee of thy sins, and of misery in them. It gives a lively discovery of the very vanity of the world and opens to thy soul some prospect of eternity, and the comfor's of the just who are at rest. If thou adherest to this, it will divorcethee from sin and solf: thou wilt soon find, that the power of its charms excceds that of the wealth, honor and beauty of the world, and, finally, will give thee that tranquility, which the storms of time can never shipwreck or disorder. - No Cross, no Crown.

A Course of Fifty Years—a Point of Time. In the first stage of life as we begin to observe the coming years, while enjoying the goldon hours of the present, our infantile conceptions of time in advance, are such as none but a youth can have. We view with bright anticipations the fair Eden to which the distance of a score of years lends enchantment. Then what a prodigious stretch of time is the thing we call a year, for in waiting in expectation, the passing moments seem tedious as hours, and a coming day as a year when it is past. Time viewed in the distant future, seems to creep with decrepitude, and our wish is, that he would move more rapidly to bring the anticipated period of our heppy manhood. But time goes at one unvarying rate; his movements are under the wise regulation of Jehovah's laws, so that he can neither haste nor tarry while the steady orbit of his wheels are balanced beyond the Sun. But delusion hides in the fair regions of the future, where hope's bright syron sings, and mercy renders viewless the toil, the burdens, the griefs, the miseries, the terrors, the perils, the woes, and the ruin in the fatal future.

It is well that time progresses at one constant and steady rate, and that experience can only come to us as a companion of years. Time is the agent of Change, and such is their wonderful power in working out destiny, that we suspeet them combined to bring revolution and put all things under dominion. So we must undergo gradual change in both body and understanding, and differ in substance and thought, or else we shall be indifferently prepared for a long and useful life. Unless changed throughout, several times before we become adult, we shall be undeveloped and unimproved, presenting the ridiculousness of manhood in speaking, understanding and thinking as children.

We must be students and go through a severe course of years in the university of time, and be taught a great deal by experience in the most offectual way, learning as fools learn, if they learn at all. Time is a great expounder and by his silent power brings things at last into positions where absurdities become evident to the most obstinate and obtuse learner. By analysis and affinity of things, time detects scattered error hid in sophisms, and exposes startling paradoxes. On contrasting profesuniverse, and the actings of matter, together of perfect charity, have become nothing, and with its application to the regulation to human conduct and human power. Time came out from eternity, and is hastening to join his immutable home; being part and parcel of that duration which is from everlasting to everlasting. So is our present life, a miniature of time, short and fleeting, having beginning and ending in it, both being woven of the same portions and seasons, and measured by successive hours, days and years. Our existence is as ephemeral as a morning flower; in the morning it flourisheth and groweth up, in the evening it is cut down and withered. Also we see the spirit of freedom is evoked; light over darkness prevails. There is a triumph of the heaven-born over the earth-born, and the hellborn. The year 1860 must witness a memorable conflict between these irreconcilable antagoniams.

Time can never be retrieved, for there are no yesterdays to come. Time cannot put back his car to reimpart the given period, for the ground on which he run is gone. His footsteps are the years that cramble into the abyss of the past,

But we can take a backward look in the memory over our own span of life, where all the realities for half a century perhaps, of what was once the dark eventful future, which we were so anxious to penetrate, is laid open to view. events of our fortune and destiny in life, are now seen in the clear light of the past; but the great weight of care, interest and import, is extracted from them by experience and realization. The invalid need not fear to give this preparation a careful trial, as we speak from experience. More than ten years since, the editor of this paper tested its excellence y individual trial in his family, with the most surprisng results, as a curative for pulmonary disease." Cases of Consumption and Whooping Cough Cured. The following, from a highly respectable gentleman, speaks for itself:—

Kerpert, N. J., May, 20, 1858.

S. W. Fowle & Co.,—Gentlemen:—This certifies that I was for many years afflicted with a disease of the lungs until I became so weak that it was with difficulty I could walk. My cough, during this time, was very severe, causing me frequently to raise great quantities of blood, attended with profuse in . *sweats.

After using various rem. *ies to no purpose. I was advised to try. "Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry." I did so, and before using the first bottle, I was entirely restored to perfect health and strength.

I would also mention, that this Balsam cured a little girl of mine, of a severe attack of Whooping Cough, when her life was given over by the physician, and all other remedies had failed. (Signad.) JOSIAH HOFF.

Beware of vile and worthless Counterfuts! The only genuine, pure, and medicinal Balsam, has the name of "I. BUTTS" written with a pen and the printed name of the proprietors, S. W. FOWLE & CO., on the outside wrapper.

Evans & Watson

Have had the surest demonstration in the following cer tificate, that their manufacture of Salamander Safes has at length fully warranted the representations which have been made of them as rendering an undoubted security against the terrific element.

Philadelphia, April 12th, 1856, Gouldman Lit. effords as Messrs. Evans & Watton,—Gentlemen.—It attords us the highest satisfaction to state to you, that owing to the very profective qualities of two of the Salaranader Safes, which we purchased of you some few menths since, we saved a large portion of our jewelry, and all our books, appers, &c., exposed to the calamnous fire in Ranstead Place, on the morning of the 11th instant.

When we reflect that these Safes were located in the fourth story of the building we occupied, and that they foll subsequently into a heap of burning rains where the vast concentration of heat caused the brass plates to melt, we cannot but regard the preservation of their valuable contents as most convening proof of the great security afforded by your Safes:

We shall take much pleasure in recommending them to men of business as a sure reliance against fire.
