THE IMPEACHMENT.

The question involving the practicability of impeaching the President of the United States is virtually decided in the 7th instant, in the House of Representatives. Considerable maneuvering had been indulged in by some of the members, for the purpose of preventing a direct vote on the question, but when the vote did come, it told heavily against impeachment. The Republican members themselves defeated it by a majority of nine, leaving out the entire Democratic vote. This appears to give general satisfaction, for the country had long since made up its mind that he was not of sufficient consequence to occupy the time of Congress with. Throwing away the only chance he ever will have of ending himself to the American people, Andrew Johnson has "damned himself to everlasting fame," and will go down to the grave "unhonored, unwept and unsung," the friendless tool of treason, and the arch-defender of the "Lost Cause" which has been a martyr in the eyes of the people. The House has voted in favor of impeachment on the vote cast, while twenty-three members were absent. The decided action of the House is, probably, the best course they could have taken, for there are more important matters connected with the interests of the government, than to fritter away the time of Congress in the trial of a man who is now completely harmless. The case would have been a martyr in the eyes of the people, and it would have done nothing to "fret and strut upon the stage," and then his time will come. Although he is President, Congress is his master; although he is commander in Chief of the army and navy, Congress is his superior officer; and, although he holds that, in certain contingencies he may be compelled to use the military and naval forces of the country to resist a law of Congress, which is unconstitutional, he cannot do so without the power to take from Mr. Johnson the scepter of authority, which is now in the hands of the Republicans, and repledged by the Democrats, like the crow who attempted to suppose their case will lead to any serious interference on the part of Congress in a matter which should be left to the Executive. The right of Congress is a matter which Congress ought to one to definitely acquire, and will continue to do so, until it has taken the right of impeachment from the former. Congress now has more vital interests to attend to. The country needs much sound and practical legislation, and it is gratifying to see that the members have set themselves vigorously to work. They should, under the circumstances, dispose of the questions of reconstruction, revenue and taxation first, and then establish the government on a complete working basis, before indulging in any discussion of political affairs of minor consequence.

ROBESON & WHITAKER.

A long time since, it was our custom, at this season of the year, to call attention to the establishments of Bridgeton, which are mentioned in the columns of the Pioneer. After keeping up the same routine for many years in succession, we have concluded to adopt a different plan, and from time to time refer to the different establishments in this city, whose attainments may be found in our columns. This week the firm of Robeson & Whitaker claims our attention. All who are acquainted with the drug and medicine business, may, however exalted, will be nothing more than its merits deserve. That it is a first class house, in every respect, no one will pretend to deny. The active partner, Mr. James L. Whitaker, is well known as one of the substantial and reliable men of our city. He served a long term with Mr. Francis Brewster, in the drug and medicine business, and acquired a knowledge of that thoroughly accomplished gentleman, of superior business qualifications, which has been of great service to him in conducting the extensive business of Robeson & Whitaker. Early in the history of the rebellion, when volunteers were needed, the lauded Lieutenant Robeson left a prosperous business and happy home, for the hardships and dangers of the war field, and his life was sacrificed in the defense of his country. During all the long months and years since that time, the business has been conducted by Mr. Whitaker, with an energy and application unsurpassed by any other in this city, and it is largely owing to his indomitable perseverance, and superior business qualifications, that the firm of which he is the active member is in such a prosperous condition at this time.

THE LECTURE.

The Lecture of Rev. Dr. Conrad, in Grosvenor's Hall last Thursday evening, was a success. The audience assembled was not so large as could have been desired, and was, perhaps, unusually select. The taste of the people has not yet been so developed as to be pleased with the higher class of Lectures. Hence, such lectures as the Dr.'s are not immensely popular. That large class who attend lectures, and will continue to do so, are wonderfully good ones. They are men of good sense and skill in their respective professions, and are inquisitive in their tastes. They cannot be deluded into attending a Lecture whose title is indicative of a serious and elevated tone. Perhaps it would be better if Lecturers would recognize this fact. They cannot elevate the people by keeping above them and out of their reach; but by coming down to their level and leading them up.

General Grant and the President.

The private letter of Gen. Grant to the President, in connection with the removal of Gen. Sheridan and Secretary Stanton, has at last been made public by a presentation of that document to the Senate. At the time it was written it was known that such an epistle was in existence, and all parties and phases of opinion claimed to be represented in its sentiments, but the General was so reticent in this matter, as he was in divulging his plans during the war, and nobody received much satisfaction. The letter itself, however, which it has now become his official duty to give to the public, is before them, and its contents leave no doubt as to the status of the General upon the great questions of the day. Grant has always been a man whose faith was shown by his works, and in this case the fact receives a more than ordinary confirmation. In this letter, the most earnestly opposes the President in his contemplated removal of Stanton. He assures him that the Secretary possesses the confidence of the country, and that it will be disastrous to interrupt that confidence. He also says expressly for the purpose of protecting that office, and that it is illegal to remove him, nor what a carrying lawyer may say in opposition.

NATURALIZED CITIZENS.

Considerable discussion and speculation have recently occurred among public men, relative to the rights of naturalized citizens. The discussion has grown out of the fact that, at the recent election in Ireland, the British voters refused to vote for certain legal privileges which some of them claimed, on the grounds of being American citizens. This action has stimulated much ill feeling in this country, and in several places meetings have been held, at which resolutions were passed asking Congress to take some decided steps in the matter. That this question, which has been an annoying and perplexing one ever since this government was established, should be properly settled is an imperative necessity. "Once a subject, always a subject" is the common saying of the British, which led to the war of 1812, and which has been very nearly involving that government in other serious difficulties several times since. The position which the government of the United States has always maintained is the correct one, for it is opposed to the doctrine of perpetual allegiance and maintains the rights of expatriation, which is the right to form new political ties elsewhere. The same rules also acknowledge that if a native-born citizen of any foreign country at the time of his emigration is liable to any duties or penalties, his naturalization in the United States cannot and will not exempt him from such liability and penalty, if he returns voluntarily to his native country. When a foreigner applies for his naturalization papers he stipulates to renounce all allegiance to any other government, prince, potentate, or power; and this renunciation must be complete before he is invested with the prerogatives of citizenship. This invested, he becomes subject to the penalties and consequences of his violation. If he voluntarily joins a filibustering expedition to commit unlawful depredations upon the citizens of another, or neighboring country, and falls into the hands of the authorities of that country, he cannot claim any protection from the United States on the grounds of a citizenship, because he has violated his privileges with this government. It is such a proceeding which, it is alleged, demands Congressional action. A party of men claiming to be American citizens, unlawfully invaded the territory of Great Britain, and committed several heinous crimes. They were caught, tried, convicted and condemned. It may be that some technical points which were denied them in their trial, but having forfeited the protection of this government by their own willful and voluntary act, it is not reasonable to suppose their case will lead to any serious interference on the part of Congress in a matter which should be left to the Executive.

THE FAIR.

The fair held by the ladies of the Second Presbyterian church closed on Christmas, and was understood to have been successful, as it deserved to be, in raising funds for the object contemplated. The ladies of the "Mission School" will hold a fair, in aid of the funds of their mission, at their house, on New Year's day. Any contribution toward this object can be left at the store of Mrs. Kithian, or with any of the managers. This is a most deserving object, and we hope it will be freely patronized. The ladies of the Pearl Street Baptist church commenced a fair on Christmas eve, and will continue it through the holidays. This is in aid of the beautiful edifice they are remodeling, and they deserve the fullest success. Those who spend holiday money had better spend a fair portion in one or the other of these enterprises.

THE FEMINISTS.

Since the election of the three Femins in Great Britain, the excitement attendant upon this decision has been on the increase. In our local press there is no fifty thousand take place in all the prominent cities, where the government has most unwisely attempted to suppress, without the power effectually to do so. Their old doctrine of "stamping the fire out" would answer, if they could stamp the fire out, but this is not the case. It is only another and a more rapid in producing it, but like so many drafts of air upon it, which take the most rapidly in producing a blaze. That governments act upon a mistaken calculation of the proper method of dealing with men whose passions are exasperated. When a man is mad, would you hit him on the head with a hammer, or would you blow him over his head with a gun, or would you make him mad and more so? He will do more quickly to reason, if his evil is just restrained, and he is for the most part left alone. But Great Britain, it seems, knows no other lesson than to go on hitting the mad Fenians over the head with just sufficient force to increase their anger. She knows no more.

SHERIDAN'S REPORT.

Gen. Sheridan, in despite of the President, is once more before the people in his report on the administration of the Department previously to his removal by Mr. Grant. In that report he ably defends his course, showing that the men who were removed were open opponents of the United States Government, and indeed were elected to their positions upon this issue. He showed that these men could not have been tried by Court Martial for several years, and therefore removals were the only possible method of carrying out reconstruction. He also insists, though in respectful language, that the President was in error in his removal of them, and that the open sympathy was the greatest cause of all the difficulties that entangled his path. The report has the true patriotic ring and will confer the sympathy which the country has always felt for Gen. Sheridan.

UTAH.

A bill has been introduced into Congress, and will probably pass that body, which will put an end to that blot upon our institutions, and to the shame and reproach of the territory of Utah. By this bill all the laws of the United States, which are inconsistent with those of the United States, are made null and void, and what is of far more consequence, the execution of the laws themselves is to be entrusted to United States officials. The laws referred to polygamy are to be utterly repealed, and the practice of the filthy system of polygamy has been a national disgrace that the matter has been the only palliation to the matter, is that the authorities have been so busy putting down the rebellion, that there has not been time for anything else. Now, however, there is a good time. With the progress of reconstruction, troops can soon be withdrawn from the Southern States, and sent to teach the people of Utah a little of Uncle Sam's civil government, and to show them the mode of government, and to show them that in all cases where a vice, and not a principle, is the question in dispute, we have the law will speedily pass, and that Gen. Grant will as speedily put it into operation.

ENGLAND.

Our difficulties with that country seem to thicken, and the chances for a peaceful settlement of the unrighteous course taken by that country, grows less, but we are afforded a glimmer of hope, as the correspondence between the respective governments is produced. The policy of Great Britain appears to be a trucking one. Just so long as she fears that we may involve her in a war, just so long she is willing to discuss the point; and just so long as she does not fear this, she is unwilling to settle at all. It will be a difficult question for us to do, and we cannot afford to lose our national honor, but we are afforded everything but that, rather than to go to war with such a power as England. What we hope for will be that Congress will do just as Great Britain did with us, which was to wait till our hands were tied, and then strike us. We can simply assert our claims, and then wait for the opportunity to enforce them. With such a perpetual humdrum as his hands the time must come when he has his hands tied, and then he will be forced to do as we do, and we will bring the money. This looks to us like the only sensible course to take in this, and we hope the Congress will act upon it.

CONGRESS.

The House of Representatives have passed the bill which makes the adoption of the Constitution of the States lately of the vote, instead of as in the original bill, upon a majority of all the registered voters. The disloyal element of the South intended to defeat, if possible, the bill by refusing to vote, but this bill, if concurred in by the Senate, will cut off that resource, and the constitutions which have been adopted, must be ratified by the people. The bill, if passed, will give the favor of Congress, and that before the close of the year we may behold a reconstructed Union, whose States shall all be represented in Congress.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

We regret to learn that Mr. Spurling, a truck master on the West Jersey Railroad, residing at Pittstown, met with quite a serious accident at Camden on Monday evening last. He was endeavoring to get upon a train, after it had started, but from the slipperiness of the track was unable to accomplish his object, and fell from the top of his feet under the wheels of the car. There could be but one result to this, and when the car had passed over, the foot was found to be so horribly crushed and mutilated as to make an amputation necessary, after which operation it is not probable that he will survive. Mr. Spurling was one of the most active citizens of the town, and receives from the community the fullest sympathy in his misfortune. People cannot be too careful at this season of the year in getting on and off from the trains, and yet, as a rule, they do not seem to be so. The accidents which are so common on the cars, and the carelessness of passengers, but with all this care, unless people learn to be careful themselves, we shall hear of many more accidents from this cause before the winter is over.

HORRIBLE SUICIDE.

Mr. Ennis, below I give you an account of a horrible suicide which was committed about one mile from Dividing Creek, on last Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 19th. A young man named Clement C. Moore deliberately shot himself in the left breast, causing death in a few minutes. He had been helping Mr. Rocap, the Hotel proprietor, kill hogs that day, and had been taking the fire-water pretty freely for some days before, as well as on that day. When the hogs were killed he went home to his father's (Mr. Hamilton Moore) and shaved and dressed in the usual manner, and then went to the hotel again and began to kill the hogs, and remarked to his brother, as he put the pistol in his pocket, that he would never see him out there again. He then went down to his brother-in-law's (John Hickman) and said to his sister that he was tired and sleepy, so they told him to go up stairs and lie down. He went up stairs, pulled off his coat and vest, and laid down on the bed, and took the pistol and deliberately shot himself in the breast. His sister hearing the report of the pistol, ran up stairs, when he banded it and said, "Kesiah, I am shot myself, and I did it on purpose. I am dying. I bid you good bye." In a short time he was dead.

GENERAL HANCOCK.

The President sent in a message to Congress on Wednesday last week, in which he recapitulated, in terms of fulsome eulogy, the course taken by General Hancock in reference to his administration in the South-western District. The gist of the whole message appeared to be that Hancock was carrying on the process of reconstruction, in opposition to the wishes of the Congress, and in opposition to the exact letter of the law under which he is acting; that no other district commander south of the Potomac had dared to do this, and that, therefore, Congress ought to vote Gen. Hancock some suitable recognition of the patriotism of his course. The message was received with shouts of derisive laughter from the Congress, except here and there a lone member, who was disposed to give the insult the whole floor over, was so ridiculous, that these insensible members soon gave up their anger and joined the laughter.

REPUTATION.

The proposition made by some of the papers in reference to repealing the National debt, seems to be the most interesting feature of the day. South, and encouragement by sympathizers North, prominent orators and party trainers, such as English, Vallandigham, Wall, Price, Bur, Ingraham, and others, have been making a vigorous campaign of each regiment in the state, which will be of interest to our brave defenders, who are to be honored on our native State during the winter months. The Government is now in a position to assume the responsibility of paying the debt, or else accepting the matter and continuing to pay it. ## SUDDEN DEATH.

On Monday evening last, Mrs. Rebecca Robinson, wife of John Robinson, residing for several years past on Dr. J. H. Barron's farm, in Bridgeton Township, suddenly received a paralytic stroke which caused her death in a very short time. Mrs. Robinson had just finished her usual work about midnight when she suddenly fell near the barn. Mr. Robinson was called to her relief, but he was too late and in a few minutes she was dead. She was a very good woman and leaves a family of several children and a kind husband to mourn her loss. She was buried on Wednesday last.

MARKET HOUSE IN BRIDGETON.

Our attention is frequently called to the importance of having a Market House in this city, where the farmers and butchers may offer for sale the various products of the farm, including meats, fish, oysters, vegetables, &c., at least twice a week, while some would object that a Market House has long been needed in this city, and if the city authorities would have a suitable one erected it would not only be a credit to the place, but would be a paying investment. If the city authorities will not erect one as a "public institution," they would, no doubt, grant the privilege to any number of individuals or company which might engage in this enterprise. A large Market House in the central part of Bridgeton, where all of our citizens might resort for the purchase of staples, especially on Market days, would be a paying investment. A dozen stalls or stands could be erected at once at a price per month or year, as would pay a large interest on the amount needed to erect such a house. Our butchers would save considerable time and expense in driving round from door to door, and our citizens would have the advantage of selecting from a much greater variety than they could otherwise get. It would not necessarily do away with the excellent fish and oyster trade in our city, but would enable our butchers to exhibit more extensively their meats and consequently make more sales. The farmers of the surrounding country would have an opportunity to bring in their vegetables and farm produce and offer it for sale, instead of peddling it from house to house as they are now in the habit of doing. The fish and oyster trade which are now conducted in Bridgeton is almost a nuisance, would be very different. Instead of peddling them from door to door, they would be sold from a hotel until the summer, and make a large profit. "Odious" as to compel the Mayor of the city to have the wagons removed, the fish and oysters in their season would be found at their appropriate place in the Market House. Some of the stalls would, no doubt, be rented by the enterprising men of our city, who are now engaged in the sale of various kinds of produce, and as they have had long experience in the trade, a "branch establishment" kept up at a slight additional cost would enable them to dispose of a much larger amount of produce than they can now through the agency of peddlers.

MARKET HOUSE IN BRIDGETON.

Our attention is frequently called to the importance of having a Market House in this city, where the farmers and butchers may offer for sale the various products of the farm, including meats, fish, oysters, vegetables, &c., at least twice a week, while some would object that a Market House has long been needed in this city, and if the city authorities would have a suitable one erected it would not only be a credit to the place, but would be a paying investment. If the city authorities will not erect one as a "public institution," they would, no doubt, grant the privilege to any number of individuals or company which might engage in this enterprise. A large Market House in the central part of Bridgeton, where all of our citizens might resort for the purchase of staples, especially on Market days, would be a paying investment. A dozen stalls or stands could be erected at once at a price per month or year, as would pay a large interest on the amount needed to erect such a house. Our butchers would save considerable time and expense in driving round from door to door, and our citizens would have the advantage of selecting from a much greater variety than they could otherwise get. It would not necessarily do away with the excellent fish and oyster trade in our city, but would enable our butchers to exhibit more extensively their meats and consequently make more sales. The farmers of the surrounding country would have an opportunity to bring in their vegetables and farm produce and offer it for sale, instead of peddling it from house to house as they are now in the habit of doing. The fish and oyster trade which are now conducted in Bridgeton is almost a nuisance, would be very different. Instead of peddling them from door to door, they would be sold from a hotel until the summer, and make a large profit. "Odious" as to compel the Mayor of the city to have the wagons removed, the fish and oysters in their season would be found at their appropriate place in the Market House. Some of the stalls would, no doubt, be rented by the enterprising men of our city, who are now engaged in the sale of various kinds of produce, and as they have had long experience in the trade, a "branch establishment" kept up at a slight additional cost would enable them to dispose of a much larger amount of produce than they can now through the agency of peddlers.
