THE CANVASS.

Both of the great parties in the nation, under the spur of the exciting questions which divide them, are making vigorous efforts for the November campaign, and making those efforts in a style that indicates no abatement of the ardor of the contest. The election in different states, although they may not involve any of the great issues, are watched with a feverish anxiety as they go in favor of one party or the other, because they not only press the probabilities of the great Presidential contest, but in their moral effect elevate, or depress, according as the result is favorable, or the contrary. The election in Vermont exhibited the Republicans on account of the largely increased majority in their favor, over the vote polled by them last year. Colorado was considered by some as doubtful, but when the result gave them a majority, their sons of triumph were greater still. On the other hand, Georgia has disappointed them, and now bids fair to throw her vote in favor of the Democrats, which exercises precisely the same effect on the minds of the people, especially as she looks at Georgia as a possible illustration of how the rest of the Southern States may go. Under these different inspirations, both of these parties work, and work with a vim that shows the earnestness of their faith in the peculiar light in which they view the issues. Money is said to be in active circulation for political purposes, and we presume that assertion is not without some foundation. Money is being used illegitimately, in any manner that contravenes the law, yet a large quantity is no doubt being put out for these purposes. Men are employed to canvass, which means that all men of careless or doubtful political faith are to be visited, talked to, labored with, enlightened, and persuaded to vote the right ticket. Speakers are employed to address the people in public, and this cannot be done without money. There are to be travelling expenses are to be paid, bills are to be printed and posted, campaign papers and documents are to be circulated, carriages are to be hired to bring reluctant or recalcitrant voters to the polls, and in a hundred other ways money can be freely used without laying either party open to the charge of unfairness or wrong. No doubt some money is used dishonestly, some is used as a bribe, but these cases are but few, for there are but few American citizens who do not feel insulted when men attempt to purchase their votes, and but few of those who are willing to sell their votes who dare to do it in view of the legal penalties which the opposite party would be sure to enforce. There is not a quarter of the amount of corruption in politics that is usually supposed. The different parties watch each other too closely to make it possible. Our honest belief is that there is but very little of this done in comparison with what is supposed to be done. So far, we have not heard of any unfair use of money in the pending elections which can fairly be traced to either party. This is not a full explanation, for both parties indulge in some styles, but it is the only explanation which occurs to us, and we throw it out for what it may be worth. Let the causes be what they may, the practice is one deserving of the strongest reprehension. Many a man who could serve his fellow citizens well, of a sensitive temperament, is permanently driven from the field, rather than endure the unmerciful sniping which is sure to be poured upon him, and the less sensitive and generally less capable are driven from his place, and when politics become so grimy that the best men of a community are afraid to enter its arena, we are in a position that imperatively calls for a reform. As the matter now stands, the newspapers which are most voluminous in abuse, are the most fully organized party organs, and the organs which can spice their barterings with the largest amount of slander are listened to most eagerly by excited partisans. The case of the two men who stand now as rivals for the highest political office in the gift of the nation is a case in point. One of the political positions now assumed by Gen. Grant is the position without party distinction have vied to do him honor. The noble, manly, manly traits which made him a favorite everywhere. His unparalleled success as a general could not be traced to the combinations of circumstances, but were only referable to a genius which has had no parallel in this generation, and both Democrats and Republicans were ready to take up the gauntlet with any one who disputed it. His humanity, his kindness, his generosity, his splendid common-sense were the exalted themes of all the people, no matter what their political creed. Mr. Seymour has always been understood to be unexceptionable in private character and in his public conduct, and we have the further right to express our conceptions both in public and private; but we have no right to defend personally either of these gentlemen for either their faith or practice. It is no proof that Mr. Seymour or Gen. Grant are dishonest men because they believe and act differently from us, any more than it is a proof of our dishonesty because these two are different from them. These are some tongues and pens that called Gen. Grant a hero now call him a butcher. His genial manners are now called drunkenness; his reticence is now stupidity; his fearless persistence in a course believed by him to be just and right is called insubordination. To read the articles of these newspapers, or to hear the speeches of these men, is to be made to feel that the very men who do this dirty business do not really advance their party cause by the grime they spatter, but on the contrary often disgust men with a cause which is advanced by this method. The same amount of brain power which is spent in vilification, if spent in securing victory to the present course, would be as likely to lessen them. We most earnestly hope that in our own country, where we are proud to say there has been comparatively little of this done, there will be a recognition of the fact that a man may be a political opponent and yet a man who is worthy of respect.

POLITENESS IN POLITICS.

We have never been able to see why a man who is a gentleman in his ordinary intercourse with other men, should not also be a gentleman when that intercourse at length assumes the form of political discussion. The question of politics is certainly not so far removed from the ordinary amenities of life, as to constitute a necessary and a different manner of conduct, that which it obtains in all other matters of life. If a man has earned the title of an atrocious felon, we allow ourselves to indulge in denunciation, but even then lingering sentiments of pity come in to modify the language, and the fact becomes apparent that there is no personal malignity at the bottom of our obnoxious words; but in politics, by an almost unanimous consent, a man who has been selected as the illustration of a party's particular views, is deemed a proper subject for the application of the same language which is, under other circumstances, applied to the thief and murderer. Mr. Jones may have been a most estimable character in private life, a good citizen, a kindly neighbor, a valuable club member, an efficient member of the local militia, an enjoying universal respect, but let Mr. Jones run for an office, and an office to which he is well qualified to fill, and does fill, if he gets it, to the general satisfaction of his fellow citizens, and the opposite papers team with an amount of invective which would make a stranger doubt the propriety of how it was that Mr. Jones had so long escaped the State prison, and what kind of party it must be who would select him as the representative of their principles. It is intimated that his private life has been more than questionable morality, that he has been in the practice of evading the laws, that he is in the habit of kicking his children and his wife, and stealing his chickens, that he is a hypocrite in religion, and never pays his charitable subscriptions, that he is a private drunkard, and altogether unworthy of the general respect which has been supposed to enjoy. Why all this should be so, we repeat we are unable to see. If Mr. Jones is a gentleman in his private life, Mr. Jones is in the other, and the only possible explanation is that his adversaries are conscious of the weakness of their cause, and hope to bolster it up with false and defamatory denunciations of the man who represents the opposition. This is not a full explanation, for both parties indulge in some styles, but it is the only explanation which occurs to us, and we throw it out for what it may be worth. Let the causes be what they may, the practice is one deserving of the strongest reprehension. Many a man who could serve his fellow citizens well, of a sensitive temperament, is permanently driven from the field, rather than endure the unmerciful sniping which is sure to be poured upon him, and the less sensitive and generally less capable are driven from his place, and when politics become so grimy that the best men of a community are afraid to enter its arena, we are in a position that imperatively calls for a reform. ARE OUR SEASONS DRY?

Judging of the Summers recollection of what the seasons were like in former years, it seems as if they were becoming much drier than formerly. During a portion of each summer, the ground becomes very dry, and the crops suffer, and are not unfrequently shortened by it. This seems to be the case not rarely, as formerly, but of late years frequently. According to the hydrographical map of the State, four or five inches less water falls annually in the southern than the northern part of the State. Situated as we are, and with the ocean on the west, and the Delaware Bay below and on the east, it is not surprising to be much surprised that as the ocean and other large bodies of water are the reservoirs from which our rains come, we should receive as much rain as any contiguous section. That this is not the fact, is owing, probably, more to the flat surface of the land than to any other cause. The higher the land the cooler it is, and the cooler the air, the more it is covered with perpetual snow. The air surrounding the land, when it is changed into drops of water, which frequently forms a stream down the windward. Forests have the effect to preserve moisture in the ground, which in turn, tends to draw more frequent rains. As the forests disappear the ground becomes drier. The sun shining directly upon the unprotected ground draws the moisture from it to be carried off to some other region. If the ground should be kept up for a series of years without vegetation, an exposure continually to the sun, it would undoubtedly become a desert. While on the other hand, if land should be kept covered up and protected from the sun's rays, it will increase rapidly in fertility. Hence, land should be kept covered, especially in the Summer. Fields pastured by sheep, or left to the weeds and brush, which in turn, by their roots, draw up the moisture and their capacity for re-production. As the country becomes cleared, we may naturally expect the seasons to become more dry, and the Summer heats more intense.

REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

This convention, which was held at Salem on Thursday last week, for the nomination of a candidate for Congress from the 1st District, resulted, as it was generally understood it would, in the re-nomination of Hon. Wm. Moore. This gentleman made a few appropriate remarks, and the nomination took place on Friday. Hon. John I. Blair, Corland Parler and James M. Scovel made speeches on the occasion.

EDWARDS & LAWRENCE.

Those who purchase clothing in Philadelphia will find on hand a very large and superior stock of Dry Goods, &c., which they are disposing of at very reasonable prices. Notwithstanding their sales are immense, they desire the public to know that they are prepared to accommodate all who may favor them with their patronage, especially on the day of the Cumberland County Agricultural Exhibition.

NEW PAVEMENT.

One of the most important improvements which has lately taken place on Commerce St., in the new pavement just laid in front of G. H. Leeds' building, now occupied by Mrs. Finlay and Isaac Lansing. If the same kind of pavement was extended towards Davis & Son's hotel, it would be a great blessing. Other parts of Bridgeton would be greatly improved by good sidewalks.

PORK vs. POULTRY.

The opinion seems to be gaining ground that poultry raising can be made a profitable business, at least in those sections where the soil is fertile. It can be made profitable in any section there is no reason why it should not be equally profitable here. A writer in the Boston Courier maintains that turkeys are raised at a loss of about one hundred pounds, and that if this is true it will help to increase the variety of production, and add to the security of the market.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

In pursuance of a notice, the delegates from the different townships and wards of Cumberland County, assembled in Convention at the Court House, Bridgeton, on Tuesday, September 22d, for the purpose of making nominations for State Senator, Assemblymen, Sheriff, and Coroner. Mr. J. W. Newlin called the Convention to order by a few appropriate remarks on the political prospects of Cumberland County for the Republican party.

Robeson, Attorney General of the State, Cornelius Walsh, Esq., of Newark. All citizens, without distinction of party will be welcome. Ladies are invited to be present.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY FAIR.

The Fifteenth annual exhibition of the Cumberland County Agricultural Society, will be held in Bridgeton on Saturday, September 26th, and Sunday, September 27th. Arrangements have been made for a grand display, and if everyone in the country who can do something towards making it a success, will do so, there need be no fears of Old Cumberland. Our exhibitors heretofore have compared favorably with any in the State, and as the present season has been of abundant crops, there is no reason why the display should not exceed that of all former years.

BRIDGETON SAVINGS INSTITUTION.

It is probably known to most of our readers that a Savings Institution, for the benefit of laboring men and women, and all classes of the community, was organized in this city in the month of January, 1867. The object of the institution was to save instead of squander whatever surplus of their earnings may remain after they had paid their necessary expenses. The institution was organized in this city in the month of January, 1867.

THE VINELAND DEMOCRAT.

This newspaper, published by D. M. Warner, of Vineland, came out last week in favor of the whole Republican ticket. This is not to be wondered at when it is remembered that this same paper vilified and defamed Republicans previous to this week, in the most infamous manner. In fact it was so mean a paper that many Democrats would not associate with it in their sight. It now denounces the Democratic party as liars, and their adherents as thieves. Those who subscribed for such a contemptible journal when it preferred to be the meaneast kind of a Republican organ.
